Egyptian president visits Dallas, talks about Middle East violence

DALLAS (AP) — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's first venture into the U.S. heartland was designed to drum up business investment in his country, but on the way he touched a personal chord with those concerned about violence in the Middle East.

Awaiting the arrival of Mubarak at Dallas Love Field, Amin Elgendy, a senior systems engineer with Electronic Data Systems, said, "I feel like he's come to see me."
For Rabbi Neil Sandler of Dallas, Mubarak's visit Saturday took on a special meaning as he shook hands with the president at a City Hall reception.

"Ten years ago it would have been unheard of for a rabbi to shake hands with the president of Egypt," he said. "We have traveled a long way."

Sandler said he also pondered the significance of Mubarak's visit on the day that Jews celebrated the planting of trees in Israel. The celebration signifies the importance of providing for future generations.

Sandler said he was not familiar with the details of Mubarak's peace initiative, but added, "Anyone that is doing any kind of creative thinking deserves to be listened to."

Mubarak wound up his five-day visit to the United States, highlighted by talks with President Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz, with a stop in Dallas, his first visit to a U.S. city besides Washington, D.C., and New York.

While in Dallas, Mubarak met with several executives of U.S. business and addressed a luncheon crowd of about 700.

George Aldridge, a North Texas State University professor and Region 6 executive director of the National Association of Arab Americans, was impressed with Mubarak.

"He spoke with such impassioned tones," Aldridge said.

Aldridge said Mubarak is frustrated with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who Mubarak described as the major obstacle in establishing an international peace conference.

Since December, violence has erupted off and on between Israeli soldiers and Palestinians in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank. The fighting has left at least 38 Arabs dead.

"Mubarak was stressing that if a moderate comes to power in Israel," Aldridge said. "The Arabs are willing to cut a deal." Aldridge said the

Police death hurt efforts to get recruit

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Police Department lost more officers in January than in any other month since 1981, and officials say the deaths of two officers is affecting recruiting efforts.

Forty-three people were scheduled to begin training as Dallas police officers next week, but many before getting started.

Capt. John Chappelle, commander of the department's personnel division, said five of the 23 officers through retirement, resignations and the deaths of John Chase, gunned down Jan. 23, and an off-duty officer shot to death when he confronted a pair of gangly suspects.

Dallas police recruiter Tom Glover said in the past, recruits often answered questions about the cost of living in Dallas, the cost and social life.

"Now we'll probably spend more time answering questions pertaining to those incidents and what the atmosphere is in Dallas now," Glover said.

In January, the department lost 23 officers through retirement, resignations and the deaths of John Chase, Chappelle said that was the highest attrition rate since January 1981.

But those who remain on the force say the rewards outweigh the dangers.

"Day to day, you feel like you're contributing something," said Langione, who joined the department a year ago. "You want a feeling of usefulness. Just going there and making money doesn't give me that."

TEA to consider tuition demands

ARLINGTON (AP) — It has been a difficult year for the families of 63 children who were told last fall they would have to pay for what is considered a basic American right: free public school education.

The fight over the district policy, which has not yet been enforced, was to be considered Monday by the Texas Education Agency.

The policy applies to children of foreign students at the University of Texas-Arlington with F-1 visas, like Muhammad Islam, who was told when he went to Swift Elementary to enroll his children in school last year that his sons could not attend classes unless he paid $4,680 in tuition.

School officials say the issue is residency. In the F-1 classification, students intend to return to their countries and therefore are not residents, the district says.

"The policy makes budgetary sense," school Superintendent Donald Wright said. "The cost impact (of paying for the students) for the district was $189,000 this year and $300,000 for the year before."

But Islam counters that foreign students pay property taxes through rent and also pay sales taxes.

But money is not the real issue, he said.

The families have said they feel like targets of discrimination.

"Illegal aliens have the right to a free education so I don't really understand the discrimination against legal aliens," Islam said.

Some of the graduate students said they would never have come to Texas if they had known of the policy because they couldn't afford the tuition for their children.

"No way, I cannot pay," said Seong Moo Yoo, 39, whose three children attend South Davis Elementary School. Yoo, a UTA graduate student seeking his master's degree in computer science, said: "I have to bring money from my family in Korea to survive, but this would be too much."

In December, a federal district judge dismissed an earlier ruling in the school district's favor, saying the TEA has jurisdiction.

A final decision on the matter could take three months.
