'Super' welcome D.C. celebrates, then greet NFL champs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ecstatic Washington Redskins fans, many of whom partied in the streets into the early morning hours after their team's Super Bowl victory, awaited the return Monday evening of the new world champions.

Even the weather offered the Redskins a warm welcome as temperatures rose into the 60s.

Local radio stations played the Washington fight song "Hail to the Redskins" throughout the day, and the receptionist in Mayor Marion Barry Jr.'s office greeted telephone callers with "City of champions, office of the mayor."

Vendors slashed prices on their outdated "NFC Champion" T-shirts and posters, while an expensive downtown restaurant offered patrons a 32 percent discount on dinner to celebrate the Redskins' 32-point margin in their 42-10 victory over the Denver Broncos.

Meanwhile, General Mills announced that their presses began rolling Monday with cereal boxes printed with pictures of the Redskins to be sold exclusively in the Washington, D.C., area later in the week.

A homecoming parade to officially welcome the champions home, featuring a ceremony with the mayor at city hall, was scheduled for Wednesday.

President Reagan announced that he wanted the Redskins to visit the White House following the parade.

"The president congratulates the magnificent Redskins," spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in making the announcement.

Reagan, who Fitzwater said was "neutral" in the Redskins-Broncos contest, watched the game in the White House theater with about 40 friends. The guest list was not released.

Fitzwater said the reason Reagan did not call the winners to congratulate them, as has been done in past years, was because "the networks changed their procedures not too long ago."

More than 100,000 fans streamed into the Georgetown section of the city as soon as the Super Bowl ended Sunday night, forcing police to close down large stretches of Wisconsin Avenue and M Street and snarling traffic heading into the city.

Screaming, laughing people, many clad in burgundy and gold, clutching banners and handmade signs or sporting hog noses, walked, jogged and hopped through the crowd proclaiming, "Williams! Williams!" in honor of their new hero, game MVP quarterback Doug Williams.

Others shouted "Elway Who? Elway Who?," referring to the Denver quarterback who had been the focus of so much pre-game adulation before being shut down by the Redskins' defensive line.

Twenty people were arrested during the celebration, most for disorderly conduct, D.C. police said.

Glum Broncos receive enthusiastic welcome

DENVER (AP) — Thousands of fans ignored the bitter cold and their disappointment to give the Broncos an enthusiastic homecoming parade and rally Monday, a day after Denver lost the Super Bowl 42-10 to Washington.

The Broncos appeared glum as they huddled in blankets in their windowless charter buses, which were flanked by a dozen police cars with their lights flashing along the parade route.

But they put on smiles for the rally at Civic Center Park, where fans cheered long and loud as temperatures dipped into the teens and the wind chill hovered around zero.

Mayor Federico Pena presented team owner Pat Bowlen with a sculpture of a rearing horse entitled "Defiance."

"We're disappointed, but you know we'll be back," Bowlen said. "We'll get it done for you."

Defensive end Rulon Jones also addressed the crowd. "Well, it's been a great year, and we're just disappointed in the way it ended. We just want to say thank you to the best fans in the country."

"I just know that one of these days we're going to live up and be number one like our fans, number one like the city and the state of Colorado," Coach Dan Reeves said. "We love you."

A celebration at McNichols Sports Arena was scheduled later in the evening.

Absent from the festivities were quarterback John Elway, linebacker Karl Mecklenburg and guard Keith Bishop, who went directly from San Diego to Honolulu to begin preparations for this weekend's Pro Bowl.

Williams must fight for top job next year

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Super Bowl heroics may bring glory, gold and the glow of respectability for Doug Williams.

They may not, however, guarantee his job.

He knows that come next summer, he and Jay Schroeder will renew their battle to be the Washington Redskins' No. 1 quarterback.

"On any given day, coaches make decisions, and they can do whatever they want," Williams said Monday as he accepted the Most Valuable Player award for his record 340-yard, four-touchdown performance.

"The bottom line for us coming to San Diego was to win the Super Bowl.

"Whatever happens after that, I'll be prepared to deal with it."

Williams limped to the podium to accept the keys to the new car that goes with the MVP.

His knee, sprained moments before he ignited Washington's record-breaking 35-point second-quarter Sunday, had stiffened up overnight.

It had been a glorious evening for Williams.

After leading the Redskins' 42-10 victory over the Denver Broncos, Williams shut off the phone in his hotel room after talking to his dad in Zachary, La.

Williams accepted one visitor, Eddie Robinson, his coach at Grambling. It was an emotional meeting, particularly for Robinson.

"I'm at the age that I didn't know if I would see a Grambling quarterback play in the Super Bowl," Robinson said.

"This is the performance he gave us for four years. It's just a different scenario."

As a four-year starter at Grambling, Williams threw for 8,411 yards and led the team to a 35-5 record.

But Robinson was just as pleased with Williams' effort against the Broncos, and said it could lead to more opportunities for blacks.

"I think the NFL has finally removed the stigma of a black man playing quarterback," Robinson said.

"Now I hope they remove the stigma of a black man being a head coach."

Williams got to start the Super Bowl after trading starting spots throughout the year with Schroeder.

Williams started the season on the bench, got the job when Schroeder was injured in the season opener, then was benched again after the 24-day players strike.

He got the starting position back after replacing an ineffective Schroeder on Nov. 15, but lost it again when he benched himself two weeks later because of a back injury.

Williams regained the spot for good when he replaced an erratic Schroeder in the season finale against Minnesota.

Still, there are no guarantees that the job will remain his when the Redskins open defense of their world championship next year.

"I think the position is extremely competitive," Washington Coach Joe Gibbs said. "We have an older player in Doug who's been around, and we have a young one who's proven he can win."

If nothing else, Williams is certain his performance in the Super Bowl will bring him more money.

He still has one year left on the three-year contract that earns him $475,000 a season, but he is confident the Redskins will tear it up and offer him a new one.

"I don't think I have to go in there and bargain with them, ask them to redo my contract," he said. "In fact, I feel if anything, they'll probably call me."

The Redskins are already paying Schroeder $800,000 a year, and with bonuses, the contract is in the $1 million range.

Can the Redskins afford to pay two players that much money when one of them will be standing on the sideline?

"That's one of the things we'll start wrestling with now," Gibbs said. "It's a tough thing, having two high-paid quarterbacks. That's something (team owner Jack Kent Cooke) will have to decide what he's going to do, and we'll all talk about it."

Aggie bears and Valentine bears for someone special.
