Leak in pipeline triggers oil slick near Galveston

GALVESTON (AP) — A leak in an underground transmission line triggered an oil slick in the Gulf of Mexico that stretched about 20 miles long and three miles wide, officials said Monday.

So far, no signs of damage caused by the leak had been spotted, U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Mark Kennedy said.

"It seems to be moving slightly more off shore," Kennedy said.

Amoco Pipeline Co., operator of the transmission line, reported the leak about 7 a.m. Monday. The resulting oil slick, which was not continuous, was 30 to 35 miles southeast of Galveston and involved about 14,000 42-gallon barrels of crude oil, Kennedy said. The leak had been sealed off Monday.

"We're dealing with just what's in the slick," Kennedy said.

Northeast winds reported early Monday afternoon were helping to break up the slick, along with waves and the current, he said.

"We haven't seen any definite signs of damage," Kennedy said. Generally, there is more environmental damage when a slick comes ashore than when it stays out in the ocean.

Amoco spokesman Ray Thompson said the 14-inch transmission line will be repaired and crews were going out to the site Monday to determine what else could be done. The line runs about three feet under the ocean floor.

"We haven't been able to determine the source of the leak," Thompson said. "We haven't had any particular trouble with that line."

The line is part of the High Island Pipeline System in the Gulf that transports crude oil from offshore rigs to various systems in the Texas City area, he said.

Unhappy officials consider dropping San Antonio EMS

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Officials of several suburban communities are considering dropping the San Antonio Emergency Medical Service, claiming it is inadequate and too expensive.

The controversy over the emergency service comes after EMS records revealed accident victims in San Antonio had to wait longer for an ambulance than those in Austin, Dallas or El Paso.

Art Herrera, an administrative assistant to San Antonio fire Chief I.O. Martinez, said EMS has contracts with 10 suburban cities for ambulance service, charging each according to population.

City officials from Shavano Park, Hill Country Village and Leon Valley, however, are among those discussing options to the current emergency service, including contracting with a private ambulance company.

"The cost has skyrocketed," Leon Valley City Manager Don Manning said. "It has more than doubled in the past five years."

Leon Valley gave notice in September that it will not renew its EMS contract after this fiscal year, when it will pay a projected $134,968 from Oct. 1, 1987, through Sept. 30, Manning said.

Shavano Park Mayor John Horner said his city paid $21,418 for the San Antonio EMS to respond to 30 calls.

Another San Antonio suburb, Hill Country Village, paid $1,200 per call for ambulance service last year, Mayor Otis Hibler said.

"We're subsidizing the service, but we're trying to be financially prudent," he said. "We have not been pleased with the response time."

EMS answered 66,385 calls in 1987, with 1,302 calls made in all the suburbs and 2,114 calls made in unincorporated Bexar County. The remaining 51,969 calls were made within the San Antonio city limits.

Bexar County's share for EMS this fiscal year was estimated at $922,889 and San Antonio's expenses for the service are projected at $11.32 million. The operating budget for this fiscal year has increased to $13.9 million, from $12.4 million last year.

FBI probe uncovers more S&L fraud

DALLAS (AP) — Five businessmen were charged with financial wrongdoing in connection with a sweeping U.S. Justice Department investigation into fraud among Texas' ailing savings and loan institutions, authorities said Monday.

U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins of Dallas called the charges "open salvo" in the beginning stages of the probe, described as the largest FBI investigation of white collar crime in the Southwest.

"This is a significant step early in the life of the task force," Collins said. "We're now seeing the first results of this investigative effort."

"We're hopeful this early success tends to cause others who are under investigation to decide what they are going to do."

He said four of the five men have either pleaded guilty or agreed to enter a guilty plea and are charged in information counts, agreeing to cooperate with the task force's investigation. The fifth man is charged in a three-count indictment filed in Dallas federal court.

More than 50 agents and attorneys from the FBI, Internal Revenue Service, Department of Justice, U.S. attorney's office and Federal Home Loan Bank Board are involved in the investigation, which began last fall and is expected to take three to five years.

The task force represents the largest commitment of human resources and money ever to investigate white-collar crime in the Southwest, Bobby Gillham, special agent in charge of the FBI's Dallas division, said.

Officials refused to say how many people are under investigation but confirmed they were looking into irregularities at 25 thrifts and 10 banks in Texas.

Three of the five were charged in connection with a 1983 loan kickback at the State Savings and Loan Association of Lubbock.

Thrift owner Tyrell G. Barker has agreed to enter a guilty plea to a charge of misapplication of funds in the scheme through which he received a $100,000 kickback on a $2 million loan, Collins said.

Former real estate broker Larry K. Thompson pleaded guilty on charges of misapplication of funds, and former broker Donald W. Nahrwald was slapped with a three-count indictment for his role in the scheme.

A fourth man, former Vernon Savings and Loan senior executive Vice President John G. Smith, agreed to plead guilty to making a false statement on the thrift's quarterly report to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Collins said.

The fifth charge was against former Commerce Bank of Phoenix executive officer Sam Thomas, who pleaded guilty to misrepresenting the financial condition of the bank.

All three financial institutions have failed, but Gillham said charges announced Monday do not mean investigation into the firms that led to the collapses was over.

Gillham said the scope of the task force's operation dwarfs the ongoing investigation of the 1-30 consortium case, in which a handful of financial institutions were investigated for fraudulent practices in the management of condominium complexes in a Dallas suburb.
