Tax rollback to cost town over $1 million

FORT WORTH (AP) — Voters in Granbury approved a school tax rollback which district officials said would cost them more than $1 million, while a much smaller number in Carroll rejected a similar measure.

In Granbury, voters on Saturday by 2,497 to 2,106 decided to return school tax levies to last year's levels, rolling back a 26 percent increase.

The rollback will result in a $1.4 million loss for the school district, superintendent Jerry Christian said.

"It will be devastating to us," Christian said. "We'll have to make dramatic cuts in every aspect."

He said taxes went up initially because of losses in state aid and inflation. Also, a new elementary school for the fast-growing district southwest of Fort Worth is responsible for the tax increase.

Voters in the Carroll Independent School District, northeast of Fort Worth, rejected a rollback 847 to 735.

In Carroll, the rollback effort was prompted by a 19.7 percent property tax increase this year and could have forced the district to cut $714,000 from next year's spending.

Rollback elections can be called if a district raises taxes more than 8 percent above what is known as the effective tax rate.

"I seriously doubt if you'll see any more tax increases over 8 percent," said Carroll school board President Robert Powell. "I would never vote for another one except in a dire emergency. It's not worth putting the school at risk."

The Carroll school board opened itself to a rollback when taxes were raised from 72 cents to 87 cents per $100 assess valuation.

School officials say they needed the increase to cover decreased state aid and additional costs caused by a growing enrollment.

A rollback proponent in Granbury, Loren Wilson, said the margin in that vote was narrower than he anticipated because of heavy spending by opponents of the rollback.

"Plus, they had more available manpower," Wilson said. "There are very few people who'll stand publicly for the rollback because they would appear to be against education."

He said the rollback effort began to protest bureaucrats giving themselves increases while everyone else is suffering decreases in salaries.

Don Weeks, who organized a committee that led the rollback drive in Carroll, said, "I'm a little disappointed, but the dollar-for-dollar we put into it, we gave them a good run."

Weeks said his group spent between $500 and $600 campaigning on the theme of "runaway taxes."

Judgeship race turns into family feud

EL PASO (AP) — The race for the judgeship of the 41st District Court has developed into a family feud, with the children of Judge John McKellips supporting his opponent in the March 8 primary.

On Saturday, the six children of John and Lillian McKellips said the judge's professional behavior, together with "his overall coercion of his family" influenced their decision.

"As a family, we have jointly decided to support Mary Anne Bramblett in the upcoming election for 41st District Court judge," they said in a prepared statement.

McKellips replied, "It makes me very sad that my opponent and my ex-wife got my family involved in the campaign. To me, it's the lowest form of politics."

Bramblett, an assistant El Paso County attorney, did not embrace what she termed an unsolicited endorsement.

"I do not want to get involved in a fight between that family. I feel I'm a pawn being used by these people," Bramblett said.

The children's action is the latest in a long family feud over property settlement and support for the three youngest children, who are in their early 20s and have varying levels of physical and mental disability.

The oldest child, Kathy McKellips Foster, said her father's influence made it difficult for her mother to hire a lawyer for representation in a divorce suit against the judge.

John McKellips said his ex-wife's negative influence on the children caused the rift in the family. He also blamed his opponent in the primary.

"I'm horrified by this desperate move on the part of Lillian and Mary Anne Bramblett," McKellips said.

"After March 8, Mary Anne Bramblett will be out of my life, but the damage she has done to my family will be permanent."
