Candidates get defensive in primary ads

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Jack Kemp calls the vice president of the United States an "embarrassment" to the Republican party. Paul Simon asks whether Democrats can trust a man who has supported nuclear power and the B-1 bomber.

Candidates are on the attack as the New Hampshire primary campaign rushes to its climax Tuesday.

For several of the dozen candidates bidding for support in the first presidential primary of this election year, Wednesday looms as a day for unpacking and putting their White House dreams in storage.

That prospect lends an air of desperation to their tactics and heightens the temptation to lash out at the opposition, especially those leading in the polls.

Kathleen Hall Jamieson, a University of Texas professor, said negative ads are appearing earlier than in past presidential contests.

While candidates may get some short-term benefit from savaging their opponents, she warned, "anyone who goes on the attack risks looking non-presidential."

Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas chipped away at Vice President George Bush's once formidable lead in national polls by suggesting that Bush was more bystander than participant in Reagan administration councils.

That tactic worked well in Iowa and now Bush, looking more like an underdog, has adopted it in New Hampshire and is portraying Dole as a Senate leader who has failed to produce the votes to sustain Reagan vetoes or to get Robert H. Bork a seat on the Supreme Court.

Most of the attacks stay within a limit that enables the attacker to claim he's using comparative, not negative advertising.

The most egregious example of an attack that went beyond normal bounds was material distributed by supporters of former television evangelist Pat Robertson that suggested a member of Rep. Jack Kemp's family had an abortion.

The material, distributed to fundamentalist Christian voters, asked, "Does he deny that his own family was involved in an abortion?" Kemp aide Mary Brunette said the allegation was "a lie. There's absolutely no truth in it whatsoever."

Connie Snapp, a Robertson spokeswoman, said there was a possibility a campaign worker in Illinois was involved in distributing the anti-Kemp material.

During Sunday's GOP debate, Kemp acted outraged when Bush said, "Give peace a chance," in Central America.

"That is an embarrassment," said Kemp, "a Republican talking about give peace a chance."

On Monday, Kemp elaborated on his wrath. "Give peace a chance" was the rallying cry of the Gephardt-Simon-Jim Wright-wing of the Democratic party that cut off all aid to the freedom fighters in Central America," the New York congressman said. "It was an embarrassment to our party to have our vice president talking like Jim Wright or Dick Gephardt."

Kemp also has attacked Bush and Dole with literature claiming both would raise taxes and cut Social Security benefits.

Jamieson said the rule is that front-runners don't attack.

She cited an ad run by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis as a classic front-runner appeal.

"I'm for more trade," says Dukakis, the leader in all polls of New Hampshire Democrats.

Dukakis comes across as taking a positive position that quietly reminds voters that another candidate — Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri — has a trade policy his opponents have called protectionist.

Gephardt came out of Iowa a winner and quickly was attacked in ads run by Simon. Those ads cited Gephardt votes in favor of nuclear power and the B-1 and said they were inconsistent with the congressman's current positions.

During the Democrats' debate Saturday, Gephardt complained to Simon:

"When you say in a TV ad, 'Who do you trust?' you're really bringing into play motives, motivation and whether or not somebody is reliable and I think that goes over the line. We can disagree on issues."

Jesse Jackson called the complaints about attacks "campaign fatigue, this tit for tat on how bruised I am."

But Jamieson said there was a legitimate distinction.

"I don't like distinction between positive and negative," she said. "You have fair and unfair. Anything that distorts one's own or an opponent's record is unfair."

Once Dole became the big winner in Iowa and erased Bush's big lead in New Hampshire polls, he became the target of attacks.

Du Pont, on the brink of extinction if he doesn't score a breakthrough Tuesday, contends Dole would raise taxes.

World Briefs

Officials prevent Lithuanian protests

VILNIUS, USSR (AP) — Soviet officials Monday cracked down on nationalists to prevent protests marking Lithuania's short-lived independence.

About 2,000 people gathered in a chill wind on Gediminas Square in central Vilnius for the official rally. Most kept their hands in their pockets and chatted with neighbors during the hourlong protest, and then quickly disappeared down the city's narrow streets.

Tuesday marks the 70th anniversary of Lithuania's declaration of independence on Feb. 16, 1918, only months after the Bolshevik revolution brought Communists to power in Russia.

Authorities made it clear they wouldn't tolerate any show of nationalist sentiment Tuesday.

Lithuanian Foreign Minister Vladislav Mikuciuskas, also by foreign journalists who fled from Moscow on a trip sponsored by the Soviet Foreign Ministry if people could mark independence day, said: "Personally, yes. But it is forbidden to organize anything."

Palestinians fight police in holy city

JERUSALEM (AP) — Police fought Palestinians in the holy city Monday, and hospital officials said an Arab was wounded by gunfire. It was the first bloodshed reported in Jerusalem since riots in the occupied lands began Dec. 8.

In the West Bank town of Kfar Salem, 40 miles north of Jerusalem, military investigators questioned four young Arabs who say Israeli soldiers using a bulldozer buried them alive after a protest Feb. 5.

"I am afraid. I thought I was going to die," Abdel Latif Mahmoud Ishtiah, 19, said soon after he was questioned in a white police van. "I dream about it all the time."

Maj. Gen. Amram Mizna, military commander in the West Bank, said a sergeant-major in the military government and two or three other soldiers were involved and would be tried.

Waldheim disputes panel's findings

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — President Kurt Waldheim rejected the "slanders, hateful demonstrations and wholesale condemnations" of those who want him to resign and urged the
