

Dole questions Bush's Texas ties as candidates shift toward South

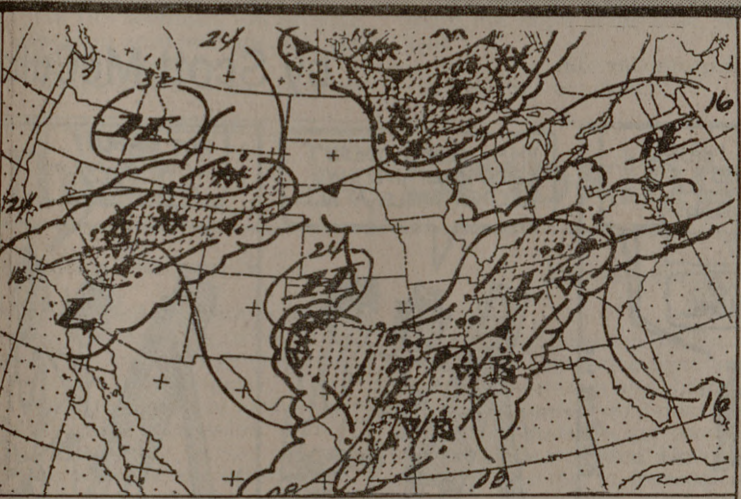

Associated Press
 — The presidential campaigns Wednesday shifted their sights to the South, with Republican Sen. Bob Dole saying adopted Texan George Bush seems to call lots of places home.
 Bush, who once represented Texas in Congress, maintains his voting residence at the Houstonian Hotel. He was born in Massachusetts, grew up in Connecticut, owns a home in Maine and told New Hampshire voters "I'm one of you" in campaigning for the primary he won Tuesday.
 "The vice president is doing well in Texas, another one of his home states," Dole cracked Wednesday during an interview.
 Dole defeated Bush in Iowa and finished second to the vice president in New Hampshire. The Kansas Texas campaign chairman, Richard Collins, predicted the race would last until the Republican National Convention in New Orleans this summer.

 "It's going to be competitive," Collins said. "It's going to be exciting and it's going to go ... all the way to the convention."
 Kevin Moomaw, Bush's state political director, said the vice president will do well in the Southern March 8 "Super Tuesday" primary. "We move South, and we move to the vice president's strength," Moomaw said.
 Texas, which will send 111 delegates to the Republican National Convention and 197 to the Democratic convention, is the largest state taking part in Super Tuesday.
 Bush has been leading all Republicans in opinion polls in Texas. Gov. Bill Clements, whose wife co-chairs the Bush campaign, said he would work for the vice president and predicted a Bush victory in Texas.

 "He's got a great organization here in Texas," Clements said. "And I think he will carry Texas handily and I'm going to help him."
 Former TV evangelist Pat Robertson was campaigning in South Carolina and Florida, where he predicted a good showing.
 "We go into the South and they're going to be playing in my backyard," said Robertson, claiming he would win convincingly in South Carolina, which holds its GOP primary March 5, three days before Super Tuesday.
 On the Democratic side, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. spent Tuesday night and Wednesday in Houston, having shunned the Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary.

Gore, who won endorsements from several top Texas Democrats including Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis, said Super Tuesday has changed presidential campaigning but other candidates don't realize it.
 "We made a decision not to spend $1 million on two or three delegates (from Iowa and New Hampshire)," Gore said. "We're saving that for the 1,400 delegates here in the Super Tuesday primary."
 Another candidate hoping to do well in the South is the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a South Carolina native and long-time civil rights leader.
 "I'm a son of the South," Jackson said. "I know its ways. I've worked harder and longer to make the new South new than anyone in this campaign."

Weather Watch

Key:
 ☁ - Lightning ☁ - Fog ⚡ - Thunderstorms
 ● - Rain ❄ - Snow ☂ - Drizzle
 ▲ - Ice Pellets ☔ - Rain Shower ● - Freezing Rain

Sunset Today: 6:15 p.m. Sunrise Friday: 7:01 a.m.

Map Discussion: A huge Pacific Ridge of high pressure will force a new front into the Central Rockies, en route to replacing the low in the southwest. This new feature is quite strong and the attendant moisture and dynamics assure snow for the Rockies and the Great Basin. As the low in the Southwest is ejected eastward by the new front and southern jet, widespread precipitation will spread from Texas to the Mid-Atlantic states, enhanced by good moisture inflow from the Gulf, overrunning, and warm air advection. A southward shift of the polar jet suggests a return of arctic air to the United States and Canadian border Friday.

Forecast:
 Today and Tonight: Overcast and mild intermittent showers and thundershowers. High today 64, low tonight in the mid 40s. Winds northeasterly at 10 to 18 mph. Chances of rain will be 90 percent.
 Friday: Continued cloudy and rainy although the rains will be somewhat diminished. High in the low to mid 50s. Northeast wind at 10 mph.

Weather Fact: Squall line - Any non-frontal line or narrow band of active thunderstorms (with or without squalls); a mature instability line.

Attorney invokes First Amendment in sedition case

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — The attorney for one of 14 men linked to white supremacist groups said Wednesday that freedom of speech is the issue at the men's trial.
 During his opening statement, Everett D. Hofmeister of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, attorney for Richard G. Butler, quoted former U.S. Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes as saying freedom of speech includes freedom for the thought we hate.
 Butler, 69, of Hayden Lake, is one of the 10 men on trial for seditious conspiracy, which is conspiring to overthrow the government by force.
 Louis Ray Beam Jr., 41, of Houston, also among the men, said during his 90-minute opening statement that if the government will admit that the Constitution is dead and there is no freedom of speech, "I'm guilty. But if our Constitution still exists, I'm not guilty."
 He said the trial is political.
 "I've been a very vocal opponent of a tyrannical government that tries to destroy the rights of free men," he said.
 The government contended in its opening statement that leaders of right-wing white supremacist groups talked about poisoning the water supplies of New York and Washington, D.C.
 James Ellison, who is in prison, discussed a poisoning scheme in 1983 at an Aryan Nations convocation in Hayden Lake with Butler and Robert Miles, assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Snyder told the jury.
 Ellison, whose name is on the government's list of witnesses, is the former leader of an Arkansas-based militaristic supremacist group called "The Covenant, the Sword and the Arm of the Lord" which maintained a heavily guarded compound in north Arkansas.

 Federal and state officials raided it in April 1985 and seized large amounts of weapons and a 39-gallon drum of sodium cyanide.
 At the time of the 1983 talk, Ellison had more than 200 pounds of sodium cyanide in his possession, Snyder said.
 At that same convocation, several supremacist leaders discussed the idea of abolishing the U.S. government and setting up an Aryan state, Snyder said.
 Louis Ray Beam Jr., 41, of Houston, a former Texas Klan leader and another of the defendants, told the 1983 conference that the time had come for war, Snyder said.
 Snyder said Beam told his audience that "the anti-God slithering homosexual" dwelt in Washington, D.C., and warned, "If you don't help me kill them ... you're going to have to beg for your child's life, and the answer will be 'no.'"
 Miles made a speech urging the use of robberies to finance supremacist activities, Snyder said, and six holdups during the next 18 months netted supremacists more than $4 million.
 Ellison "sent a paper around to be signed," and when it came back signed by the leaders, Ellison said, "All of us today entered into a conspiracy against the government of the United States," Snyder said.
 The prosecutor said no one disagreed with Ellison's statement and "the meeting ended with the Nazi stiff-arm hail victory salute."
