Jansen's dreams end with 2nd fall

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — In the blink of an eye, Dan Jansen's last chance to hang an Olympic speed skating medal on his sister's memory ended in tears.

For Jansen, the Olympic dream turned into a nightmare three times over: the death from Leukemia Sunday of his sister, Jane, a fall in competition later that same day, then — impossible as it seemed — another fall Thursday.

With about 200 meters to go in the 1,000-meter race, Jansen slipped, fell to all fours, spun around and slid into the right wall. He pushed back his hood and sat with legs splayed, mouth open, stunned, until Coach Mike Crowe and teammate Nick Thometz helped him up.

At the starting line, he embraced his fiance, Canadian speed skater Natalie Grenier, burying his head on her shoulder, sobbing visibly, holding her as if he never wanted to let go.

His worst fears and those of millions with their hearts in the race had come true.

"I'm afraid for him," Geraldine Jansen said a few hours before the race from the family home at West Allis, Wis. "He's been trying to get it out of his mind. But he said that just when he's got it in perspective, somebody sends another good will message, a telegram or something, and then it all comes rushing back like the day it happened."

It happened again. This time on a straightaway, where he had never fallen before in a race.

This time 200 meters from the end, confident of the gold.

This time after starting perfectly and skating flawlessly.

He passed 200 meters in 16.80 seconds, fastest of the first eight skaters.

He passed 600 in 44.02, another best.

Then, a half-lap later, just after the 800-meter mark approaching the final turn, he hit his right outside edge.

"I felt like I was still accelerating and I put my right skate down and it caught the outer edge," Jansen said. "I couldn't roll back over and I was down."

"He tried to put too much power in and hit an outer edge," Crowe, his coach said. "He put all the weight on the outside of his right skate and it's not a good balanced position. He fell over on his right side. It's not something I ever recall him doing."

When Jansen came to a stop, he sat staring in bewilderment. The crowd fell silent.

U.S. skier hurts leg in wreck with worker

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — A U.S. skier may have broken her leg in a collision with a course worker, and East Germany scored another sweep of women's luge Thursday at the Winter Olympics, where strong winds forced postponement of the women's downhill.

America's team, with only one bronze medal, seemed to be finding new ways of losing as the Eastern Europeans continued their domination.

America's best hope in the women's downhill, Pam Fletcher, sustained what probably is a broken leg when she slammed into a volunteer worker during training for the race.

"I came down the training hill, and you have to cut over a cat-crossing to meet up with the chair lift," Fletcher said. "A man came across the exit. We tried to avoid each other. He went one way. I went one way. He went the other way. I went the other way."

"I just hope my teammates can do the best we can for the U.S. of A," Fletcher said.

They were, but it wasn't good enough. Not yet, anyway. That could change when the figure and speed skaters get back into action.

Winds gusting to 72 mph blew

Swiss skier Brigitte Oertli off the course as she tried to get the downhill going Thursday morning. The race was postponed until Friday, weather permitting.

Wind gusts of 25 mph messed up the ski jumping schedule, where Matti Nykanen, the "Flying Finn," was trying to become the Olympics' first double-jumping gold medalist. The 90-meter team jumping was rescheduled for next Wednesday. Nykanen already has won the individual gold on the 70-meter hill.

In women's luge, Bonny Warner was sixth but gave America its best finish ever in the sport.

The luge medals went, in order, to defending gold medalist Steffi Walter, Ute Oberhoffner and Cerstin Schmidt. Walter, 25, had taken 1987 off to have a baby and said she only made the team "because of what I did in 1984."

American Brian Boitano was second after the compulsory figures behind Soviet Alexander Fadeev and ahead of world champion Brian Orser of Canada with the short program coming up Thursday night. The medal will be decided Saturday in the freestyle, and Boitano is in a great position to earn America's first gold of the Games.

Aggie golfers open season

The Texas A&M men's golf team opens its spring campaign against 20 other teams Thursday at the Pan American Intercollegiate at Club Campestre in Monterrey, Mexico.

A&M has not finished lower than fourth in the last six Pan Americans and no lower than third in the last three. The Aggies won the tournament in 1986. A&M junior All-American Roy McKenzie won the event that year as a freshman and finished ninth last spring.

"We've played well in Monterrey in the past, and I see no reason why we can't do it again," A&M Head Coach Bob Ellis said. "The course there is fabulous and the competition we'll face is top-notch. It's just a matter of whether we can get everyone playing well at the same time. Against that type of competition, we'll have to get four strong scores each day to have a shot at it."

A&M enters the tournament as the No. 15 team in Golf Coaches Association of America poll. The Aggies are led by McKenzie and All-American candidate Neil Hickerson. Hickerson was the team's most consistent player in the fall with an average score of 73.

Freshmen Bobby Gee and Mark Miller and sophomore Randy Lee will also be competing for A&M. Miller will be making his collegiate debut.

Ag baseball plays host to Privateers

The Texas A&M baseball team will play host to the New Orleans Privateers in a three-game series this weekend at Olsen Field.

The teams will play a game today at 3 p.m. Sunday's double-header will start at 1 p.m. It also will be 25-Cent Baseball Day at the ballpark.

A&M is 5-0 this season in sweeps of Lubbock Christian Southwest Texas State. UNO is 0 after a sweep of Jackson State last week.

Baseball America ranks UNO fifth and UNO seventh in the nation. ESPN/Collegiate Baseball ranks the teams No. 14 and 24, respectively.

A&M third baseman Scott Ingstone will be reunited with American Games teammates Wood and Joe Slusarski of UNO. The three players helped their team win the silver medal last summer.

Slusarski (13-1 with a 2.87 ERA last year) will start Friday's game for the Privateers. A&M will counter with Nick Felix (14-0 ERA).

The Aggies will go with Snedeker (1-0, 1.00) in the game Saturday and Randy Pugh (1-0, 1.29) in the nightcap. UNO will pitch Phil Wiese (0-4, 5.00) and Darin Fernandez (1-4, 5.00) Saturday.

The Aggies play Sam Houston State, Lamar and Louisiana State next week.

SWC Indoors start track year this weekend

By Curtis L. Culbertson

Assistant Sports Editor
The Southwest Conference track season gets out of the blocks this weekend with the SWC Indoor Championships in Fort Worth.

The Texas A&M men's and women's track teams will compete Friday and Saturday in the event at the Grand County Convention Center. This is the first year the track indoors has been scheduled as a two-day event.

Arkansas has dominated the event for the past nine years, winning eight titles since 1979, including the last seven. The Aggies won the crown in 1987, breaking the Razorbacks' string of titles.

A&M's Stanley Kerr and Andre Carson are expected to do well in the 55-meter dash. Mike Stulce and Patrick Herrings should be top contenders in the shotput — but Texas is expected to be the team the people the Hogs a real run for the money.

Greg West has already qualified for the NCAA indoor championships in the pole vault at height of 17-3/4 and is the Aggie favorite in the event. Kerr also has qualified for the March national indoors meet in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6:23.85 seconds.

The Lady Aggie tracksters expect to improve on last year's fifth-place finish. A&M's Melissa Clark-Stott has the best high jump in the conference this year at 5-9/4, an A&M record.

The men finished seventh last year, scoring only 26 points in the Kansas' 93.

The Razorbacks have won the NCAA indoor championships four years in a row. And the SWC dominated collegiate track last year, having the highest conference point totals in indoor and outdoor competition.
