A&M official urges departing students to be safe on break

By Taani Baier
Reporter

Many Texas A&M students soon will be leaving College Station for a week of fun and sun, and even though they may not even want to think while on break, they should be aware that safety is important.

Dr. Jim McCloy, acting vice president of academic affairs for Texas A&M at Galveston, said people hear speeches about safety time and time again, but accidents still happen. Making students aware of the dangers they may encounter while on break can help to keep those accidents to a minimum, he said.

Two favorite spring break activities, drinking and swimming, can lead to problems, but the two together can lead to fatalities.

The biggest concern is that students are going to drink and then try to swim, McCloy said.

McCloy said the third-largest age group of drowning victims are those between 19 and 24 years old, outnumbered by only teenagers and young children. College-aged people make up 15 percent of all drowning victims, he said.

He said one of the biggest reasons for the high percentage is that there are so many more people in that age group at the beaches.

Aggies, along with thousands of other students from around the country, will flood Texas beaches.

Dick Bushnell, communications director for the South Padre Visitor and Convention Bureau, said that between March 12 and March 19, they expect to have 75,000 college students visiting the city. During the spring break season, late February to late March, they expect to have a total of about 250,000 students.

Clements: Proposal to fight AIDS spread may be illegal

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says a proposal to instruct drug users in cleaning shared needles and engaging in safe sex is under review and may not be legal.

"The whole idea is under discussion," Clements said Wednesday. "My general counsel is looking into it. We're looking at the legal aspects of it. Apparently, in their charter, they're not legally allowed to do this."

Clements was referring to a proposed pilot project by the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse designed to help combat the spread of AIDS.

Last week, commission officials said that under the program, intravenous drug users would be given bleach and instructed on cleaning shared needles. They also would be educated about safe sex practices and given condoms.

Bob Dickson, executive director of the commission, voiced disapproval that news reports had focused on the proposal, saying it was only one aspect of the fight against acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"The drug-using population... is the main avenue for the spread of AIDS to the heterosexual population," he said. "That's what needs to be remembered."
