Admissions get replacement for retiring director

By Mark Gee
Staff Writer

Retiring Executive Director of Admissions and Records Robert Lacey says his replacement, Gary R. Engelgau, has the experience and education needed to implement the Texas A&M Board of Regents' plan to limit enrollment at A&M.

Engelgau currently is director of admissions and records at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He will assume the A&M position May 1.

"Enrollment management is his strength and that is the big challenge at A&M," Lacey, a member of the selection committee, said. Lacey is retiring after 23 years in Texas A&M's Office of Admissions and Records.

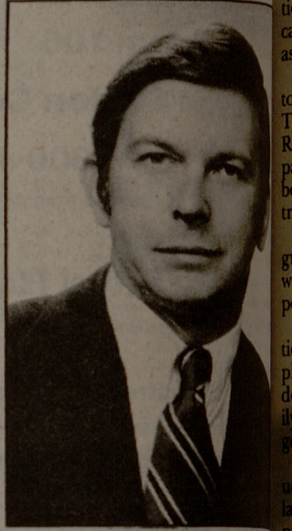

The Board decided in 1987 to cap freshman enrollments in Fall 1988 at 6,600 as part of a plan to limit the enrollment at A&M to 41,000 by 1993.

"Texas A&M is clearly moving into the situation where there are many more qualified applicants than can be admitted," Engelgau says. "I am from an area where that has been true for many years."

Engelgau has been a part of the 37,000-student Illinois university since 1967. He has served as the director for seven years.

"So how do you make the decision among fully qualified applicants?" he asks. "It is a matter of trying to reflect the many goals and objectives of the University. You are trying to pick up on the feelings of the Board of Regents, faculty, former students, and a little bit of everyone."

Engelgau received his master's degree in guidance and counseling from the University of Michigan in 1964 while working full time in Michigan's registrar's office. He also earned a psychology undergraduate degree five years earlier at Michigan campus.

The duties of his new position are important to Engelgau because of their impact.

"What you are essentially planning the future of the university," Engelgau says. "The type of students enrolled is a part of the future and it is clearly an important part of the future."

He says diversity on campus is important because students learn from other students and the more diverse the person's experience with other people, the more opportunities for learning.

At the Urbana-Champaign campus, Engelgau worked three years as an assistant for internal operations and two years as assistant to the director for the pre-college program. He coordinated enrollment, admission and early enrollment of students.

Student receives state title for being outstanding soldier

By Kristin Czarnik
Reporter

John Star Baxter, a member of the Texas A&M Corps of Cadets and a senior environmental design major from Houston, received a service medal for being an outstanding soldier in the Texas National Guard.

The award was presented to Baxter by Gov. Clements in Fort Worth at the National Guard Convention.

Baxter, who became involved in the Texas National Guard two years ago, said he entered the competition for "Texas Soldier of the Year" last July.

"My sergeant said he would like me to try out for the award," Baxter said. "So I decided to give it a shot."

"I was chosen to represent my unit in Houston based on an essay I submitted to a board that selected soldiers for the competition."

After winning various competitions for his unit across the state, Baxter said he was interviewed by the board and won the title of "Texas Soldier of the Year" in February.

"The board looks at your initiative, sharpness and military bearing," Baxter said. "They (the members) also try to observe your attitude and competence level during the interview."

In May, Baxter, who will be representing Texas, said he will compete against seven other states at the competition in San Antonio. Every state will be recognized.

Baxter said he met a lot of other people at the convention.

"If I would not have won the award, there is no way I could have shook hands with the governor," Baxter said. "Winning the award also been good for my career because now I know where I want to aim my goals at."

Baxter said he wants to be an architecture professor and also a command sergeant major, the highest rank in the National Guard.

"I am convinced that you can have a full-time job as a civilian and give 100 percent to the National Guard," Baxter said.

Suspect surrenders after church shooting

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Fort Worth man suspected of firing a gun into a crowd outside of a church and injuring two people surrendered to police Monday, authorities said.

Ollie Thomas, 74, faces two charges of attempted murder in the Sunday shooting of a teen-age girl and her aunt, Fort Worth police spokesman Doug Clarke said. Thomas was held on bonds totaling $30,000.

"His attorney was with him and he (Thomas) didn't say anything," Clarke said. "He just surrendered. Obviously, the detectives are going to try and talk to him, but whether or not they can, we intend to continue our investigation and present the evidence to prosecutors."

Thomas is accused of opening fire on the small group of church-goers unloading from a church van after demanding the return of his adoptive daughter, who was not at the church.

Bridgett Shirley, 14, remained in serious condition Monday in the surgical intensive care unit at John Peter Smith Hospital, spokesman Drenda Witt said. She underwent 3½ hours of surgery after suffering a gunshot wound to the lower leg.

Van passengers told police that with a gun stopped the van during its pick-up route and that he was looking for his 16-year-old adopted daughter, Carmel Shirley, who had left home a few weeks ago.

When the van arrived at the church, the same gunman was

"He was just hollering 'I want my baby,'" Earnestine Shirley, Carmel's natural mother, said while talking about killing the suspect.

Family members said the van opened fire when he was told Carmel Shirley was not at the church.

Earnestine Shirley said that she stepped off the van and heard the church, she heard a bullet whizz past her head. The crowd of 15 to 20 scattered, witnesses said.

One bullet pierced Earnestine Shirley's elbow and another struck Bridgett. The gunman fired five times at Bridgett's mother, Shirley, at close range, but did not wound her.

"Bridgett had tried to run out the door and was found on the ground on the side of the church," Shirley said.
