Appeals court rules against prison inmates

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a ruling denying damages to a man for treatment he received as a Texas prison inmate.

Clarence Ray Hines contended he was unconstitutionally deprived of some mail from his lawyer and that he was roughed up by a prison guard while he was trying to straighten out his mail situation.

A brief printed opinion of the court Wednesday, said Hines detailed nothing more than carelessness by a mail room employee and possibly overzealous actions by a guard — neither rising to a constitutional question.

The court issued a similar ruling in the case of Texas prison inmate Milton James Anthony, who claimed he was subjected to cruel and unusual punishment by being roughed up by a prison guard who found him in a hallway when he was supposed to be in his cell.

"We will accept that Anthony received more punishment than he deserved and that the treatment he received at the hands of the guards might have been rough and unfair," a three-judge panel said in an unsigned opinion.

"Unfortunately for Anthony, however, the courts cannot, and the Eighth Amendment does not, protect individuals from all rough or unfair treatment. The Eighth Amendment protects against cruel and unusual punishment only."

"The behavior here, under prison conditions, simply does not shock the conscience," the court said, upholding dismissal of Anthony's suit.

In a third case filed by a former Texas prison inmate, the court ruled that requiring a prisoner to work without pay has nothing to do with slavery, cruel or unusual punishment or denial of equal protection under the law.

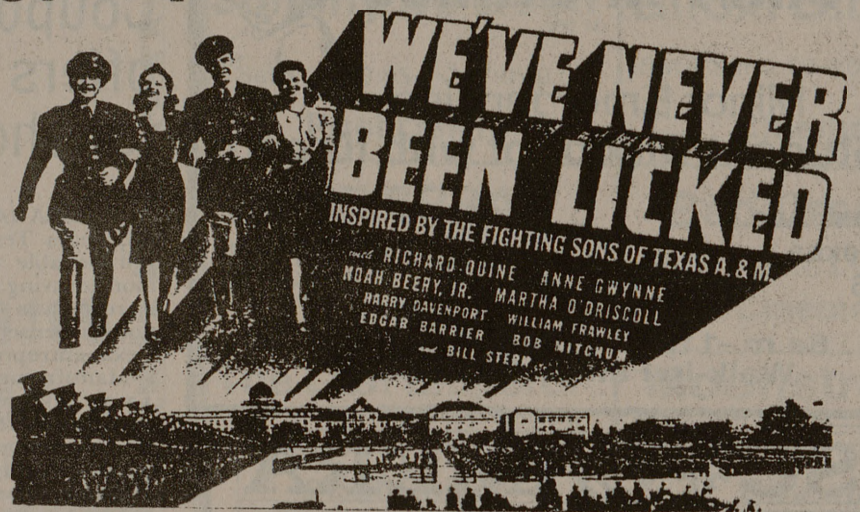

Harry Lee Wendt, James L. Wooten and Danny Gene Mahn filed suit claiming that being required to work without pay while in prison was a violation of the 13th Amendment, which outlaws slavery. They also claimed they were being deprived of due process and were being subjected to cruel treatment.

District Court Judge Norman W. Black dismissed the case as frivolous, and Wendt appealed.

"We agree that his case obviously is frivolous," the 5th Circuit said in a brief opinion written by Judge Jerre S. Williams.

Williams points out that the 13th Amendment says specifically that those who are convicted of crimes may be required to perform involuntary service as punishment for their crimes.

Library staff prepares for part during National Library Week

By Bobby Bernshausen
 Reporter

The staff members at Sterling C. Evans Library will do their part next week to observe National Library Week by putting together displays and events.

Wednesday, the Friends of the Sterling C. Evans Library will sponsor a book sale in the south side of the library from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. A wide selection of books will be available at prices of 25 cents to $5. Posters also will be on sale for $5.

Nan Butkovich, science reference librarian and chairman of the campus National Library Week celebration, said the Friends of the Library will decide what to purchase with the proceeds of the sale. She added that in the past, paperback books were bought with the money.

"The posters promote reading and try to show there is more to life than textbooks."

Butkovich said the posters are from the American Library Association.

"The posters promote reading and try to show there is more to life than textbooks," she said.

Thursday, ceremonies will be held for the annual employee Longevity Awards and the Library Week scholarships, including the Library Opportunity Awards which were donated by Louise and James W. Davis.

Bill Kinyon, the library's public information coordinator and the business reference librarian, said the Longevity Awards are given to employees who have worked for the library ten years or more.

Butkovich said the Library Week scholarships are for $200 and are given to library student assistants.

Friday, Dr. David B. Gracy will speak on Moses Austin at 2:30 p.m. in Room 204C of the Evans Library. Gracy is the author of numerous books, most recently "Moses Austin: His Life," published in 1987.

Gracy, who is a professor at the Graduate School of Library and Information Science at the University of Texas at Austin, has received many awards, including one from the San Antonio Conservation Society for the Best Books on Texas.
