Singing Cadets present spring concert

Texas A&M students and their parents will have the opportunity this weekend to enjoy a night of entertainment from the Singing Cadets. The A&M organization will present its spring concert Saturday night in Rudder Auditorium.

The "voices of Texas A&M," who have produced seven albums and toured Europe, will have an eclectic program of music for Aggies and parents. Uniform Manager Brian Allen says. Allen says the group will perform two one-hour sets of gospel, folk, ragtime and big band classics from the 1930s and 40s. All of the A&M school songs will be performed as well, Allen says.

The concert will begin and 8 p.m.

OPAS to feature Music from Marlboro

Some of today's most respected chamber musicians will be on the Texas A&M campus Monday night.

The final concert in the MSC-OPAS Music Series will feature the chamber group Music From Marlboro. The group will perform in Rudder Auditorium beginning at 8 p.m.

The chamber group is based in Marlboro, Vermont, and consists of eight musicians. Featuring a lineup of woodwind and brass instruments, the group will perform chamber music selections by composers Mozart, Beethoven, Janacek and Ligeti.

Preceding the concert will be a lecture by Franz Anton Krager, conductor and music director of the Brazos Valley Symphony Orchestra.

Ann Black, executive director for MSC-OPAS, says Krager's lecture will deal with some of the musical selections to be performed.

The lecture will be in Rudder Theatre at 6:45 p.m. Krager also teaches an A&M course in music appreciation.

Tickets for the performance are available at the MSC Box Office. Ticket prices are $5.50, $6.75 and $8.50 for students, and $6.50, $8.00 and $10.00 for non-students.

Adolph Coors Company aids cattle ranchers in dry county

ALBANY (AP) — It's against the law to sell beer or any other kind of alcoholic drink in Shackelford County, but a beer truck was welcomed Thursday.

The Adolph Coors Co. delivered 44,000 pounds of feed grain pellets made from malt leftovers, a brewing byproduct, for cattle left without grass because of last month's huge range fire.

"I'm sure it (the truck) will turn some heads in Shackelford County, but there's no beer in there," said Bob Livingston, legislative affairs manager for Coors in Austin.

County Extension Agent Lawrence Winkler said the majority of cattle have been moved to other pastures.

Alan Herman, district conservationist for the Soil Conservation Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, said about 7,500 head of cattle remained in Shackelford County.

He said more than 20,000 square hay bales, weighing about 60 pounds each, and nearly 3,000 round bales, containing about 1,000 pounds of hay each, have been given to ranchers.

Livingston said the high protein feed supplement, manufactured by Adolph Coors' wholly owned subsidiary Coors Biotech Inc., should help feed the remaining cattle for four days.

Officials say the delivery was one of the largest donations to ranchers since the fire that began March 10 burned more than 300,000 acres in five counties.

Dusty Garrison, of state Rep. Rick Perry's office, said the grain pellets were donated by Coors Biotech. He said he understood that Coors employees heard of the fire and began making arrangements for the donation.

County Judge Marie Smith said other beer trucks have traveled through the county because counties around Shackelford are wet.

"I just wanted to be thin, beautiful...perfect."

No one knew the terrible game I was playing with myself. Not my parents. Not even my best friend.

Until Mom and Dad noticed how unhappy I was. Then they knew I had a problem. They risked confronting me. I denied I had a problem.

But I knew it was a lie.

I saw how my obsession had hurt my relationships with my friends and my family. I wasn't close to anyone anymore. I didn't trust anyone. I felt so alone.

I couldn't stand it anymore. I was tired of spending my life constantly obsessed with food.

That was the worst part. Discovering the physical effects of what I'd been doing. I never thought binging and purging was doing such serious damage.

I'm lucky my family got me help.

If you or someone you know is intensely afraid of being overweight, has chaotic eating patterns, exercises excessively, or has other symptoms of an eating disorder, call us.

You're not alone.

I didn't realize how much I was harming my body. When I looked in the mirror, all I saw was fat. I didn't think there was anything wrong with what I was doing. I just wanted to be thin and beautiful.

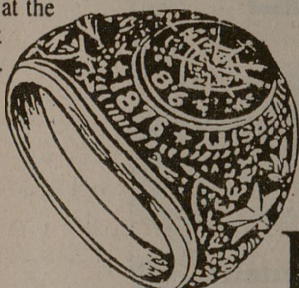

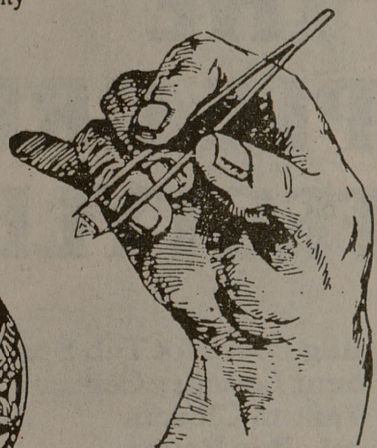

I promised myself this would be my last binge. Tomorrow I would stick to my diet. But it kept happening again. And again.
