NAACP makes 'costly demands' for DPS

AUSTIN (AP) — Several differences remain on resolving issues of alleged racial discrimination in the Texas Department of Public Safety, both sides in the negotiations say.

Gerald Caruth, head negotiator for the DPS, said the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People presented "new and additional demands" during talks Monday that would be costly.

Funds to implement changes required by the new demands were not readily available and would have to be approved by the Legislature, he said.

NAACP officials said that while the DPS has agreed to negotiate on some issues, other more important issues remain unresolved.

Grover Hankins, chief negotiator for the NAACP, said the DPS has not gone far enough for black officers, passed over for promotions.

Another point of disagreement between the two groups is the oral review board.

The DPS has resolutely maintained that the promotion system, including the oral review board, is non-discriminatory.

Three blacks had been promoted to sergeant since January, and two blacks promoted to captain, Carruth said. He also said Lee Roy Young, a black investigator, is on the promotion list for the Texas Rangers.

NAACP officials countered that blacks still make up only 1.7 percent of the 610 law enforcement supervisors in the department, and 3 percent of 2,584 law enforcement officers.

Hankins stopped short of saying that the civil rights group would file a lawsuit but warned that "if there are things that we feel we cannot get, then a lawsuit would be filed."

If a lawsuit is filed, Hankins said other groups that have expressed interest in the case, including the American American Legal Defense Educational Fund, and the National Organization for Women, would be asked to join.

DPS negotiators said they would present Monday's issues to the Safety Commission when they meet in Corpus Christi on April 21.
