A&M students go to Soviet Union for culture study

By Christina De Leon Reporter

Seventeen Texas A&M students will travel to the Soviet Union this summer for language and cultural studies as participants in the modern language department's summer study abroad.

'We are in for an incredible cultural tour," Dr. Olga Cooke, the organizer of the six-week program, said. She said the trip's highlights will include a two-week tour of the Kremlin, Red Square, Kiev and Lenin-

Cooke said the first four weeks of the program takes place in Moscow, and concentrates on conversation, cultural and language instruction taught by Soviet teachers.

to complete two semesters of Russian and an one-hour preparation course before the trip.

The goal of the preparatory class, Cooke said, is to provide students

Lion carcasses prove rumors of animal hunts

HOUSTON (AP) — Two African lion carcasses were found on the Wallisville Reservoir land, confirming rumors that lion hunts are taking place, Army Corps of Engineers of-

Corps officials said they found the carcasses earlier this month on federal land purchased for the long-stalled reservoir near the mouth of the Trinity River

Charles Craddock, a corps ranger who watches over the Wallisville property, said the lion hunt organizer is believed to be a nearby property owner. The hunts probably began on private property, he said.

"The speculation is that a couple of lions ran over onto government property, and they shot them any-way," he said. "My information is that about six lions have been killed in the past two weeks."

The lion carcasses were skinned and headless, and the missing parts are probably now someone's lionskin rugs, Craddock said. He said parts of six goats, apparently used as bait to lure the lions, also were found.

Another discovery near the lion carcasses was a .375 Magnum rifle shell for what Craddock described as "a real elephant gun."

He said the lion carcasses were found about 60 yards apart about 100 yards inside federal property. Ed White, spokesman at the Army engineers' district headquarters in Galveston, said the corps called Texas Parks and Wildlife Depart-ment game wardens after discovering the carcasses.

'You can't assume that you can photograph anything," Cooke said. The class the students take before traveling is meant to make students aware of these types of restrictions.

Catherine Zudak, a senior history major, said the Soviet Union is not a grim place like many people think.

"The people were very nice to us," Zudak recalls, adding that most Soviets were impressed that the American students could speak Russian.

Ian Dick, a senior physics major, said he decided to participate last year because he wanted to improve his Russian. 'I figured it was the only way to learn the language," Dick said. He said the trip greatly improved his language skills.

The program, which begins May 20 and ends June 24, costs $3,300, which Cooke said includes airfare, travel, instruction, texts, accomodations and flight insurance. A $200 refundable deposit is also required for emergency expenses, she said. Mark Morgan, a junior biology major and Russian minor, decided to participate in the program this summer because he enjoyed the langauge.

"I enjoyed Russian enough that I was interested in the cultural aspect of it," he said. He especially looks forward to visiting Moscow and improving his language skills, since opportunities to practice Russian in College Station are difficult to find.
