Art curator says 'pushes limits'

Wi Luan's 'Yellow Wall' is part of a collection assembled by ARCO on exhibit through May 31. The exhibit opened Monday with a symposium on western influence in contemporary China.

Staff Writer

A collection of contemporary Chinese paintings being displayed in Rudder Exhibit Hall demonstrates unprecedented artistic freedom in the People's Republic of China, an adjunct curator of Chinese art said Monday.

Dr. Richard E. Strassberg, adjunct curator of Chinese art at the Pacific Asia Museum in Pasadena Ca., said the Chinese artists' experimentation with Western styles pushes the limits of the communist country's officially accepted art.

"Beyond the Open Door: Contemporary Paintings from the People's Republic of China," is a collection of 40 paintings presented by University Art Exhibits and sponsored by ARCO. The exhibit includes oils, pastels, collages and mixed media paintings all completed within the past six years.

"All of these works are timely reminders of the yearning for progress and the hope for a better life which motivates China's people, regardless of their circumstances," Strassberg said Monday at a symposium, which was part of the exhibit opening. "And it is a pathmark in the growth of its artists who have now begun to articulate these yearnings with an expanding vocabulary of styles."

He said many of the Chinese artists featured in the exhibit have two tracks of artistic work. One track is for the production of governmentally accepted work and the other track is for creative expression.

One painter, Li You'en, is a costume designer at the Shanghai Drama Institute. His painting, "Hot and Humid," is one of the most controversial of the exhibit because it is sensual, Strassberg said. The photo-realistic painting was inspired by a French magazine advertisement.

He said, in viewing the works, it is important to realize the external limitations imposed on the Chinese artists. The artists rarely are exposed to western art and most of the paintings were done with minimal supplies.

At the conclusion of the exhibit at Texas A&M on May 31, the paintings will be sent to private, university and museum collections.

Reservations for guided tours of the exhibit, for five or more people, can be made by calling University Art Exhibits at 845-8501.

Judges create policy to limit legal comment

EDINBURG (AP) — Judges in Hidalgo County say they are developing a policy to restrict what lawyers may say to news reporters about pending cases.

Some attorneys claimed the judges want to establish a gag order that would tread on their First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

"What the judges are having problems with is having to retry cases and having to declare mistrials because the lawyers are trying their cases in the media," said State District Judge Hector Villarreal, one of 10 members of the Hidalgo County Board of Judges, which is working on the new policy.

Villarreal said a judicial order under consideration would restrict pre-trial comments from lawyers based on the Canons of Ethics of the Code of Professional Responsibility covering all attorneys practicing law in the state of Texas.

Lawyers violating the ethical rules currently are subject to punishment by the state Bar Association Grievance Committee, in a process that can take months.

But those violating the judges proposed court order by discussing anything beyond basic factual information would be subject to a contempt of court citation, Villarreal said.

"I consider it a gag order to stop lawyers from talking to the media," District Attorney Rene Guerra said. "All I know is that sooner or later a lawyer's going to have to go to jail to test this order," Guerra said.

Janet Warren, Texas deputy director for Freedom Of Information, said the order would be an unnecessary regulation and a "severe violation of the First Amendment."

"This sort of thing can't be tolerated," Warren said, who was speaking on behalf of Texas chapters of the Society of Professional Journalists-Sigma Delta Chi.

"We're hoping these people will come to their senses and back out of this proposal," she said.

Villarreal said the order expected within the next two or three weeks in the lower Rio Grande Valley counties would not restrict the First Amendment, and would protect other constitutional provisions, including the right to a fair trial.

Civil attorney Brinkley Oxford of Edinburg said lawyers in the county will file a lawsuit if they find the order is too restrictive.

"The First Amendment does not stop south of Falfurrias," Oxford said.

He said some attorneys would argue that the ethical canons do not prohibit lawyers from expressing opinions, but added he thinks the judges eventually will "come up with a workable solution."

Suspect in embezzlement in Iowa captured in Texas

FRIENDSWOOD (AP) — A man accused of embezzling $1.1 million from an Iowa credit union nearly five years ago was arrested Monday by authorities who said they had grown suspicious of his spending cash on a home and fancy cars.

Steven Hadley, 40, was taken into custody without incident by FBI agents and police in this city near Houston, FBI officials said.

Friendswood Police Lt. Gary Edwards recognized Hadley after seeing his picture in a recent FBI flier issued in connection with the television series "Unsolved Mysteries," FBI officials said.

Hadley was reported missing by his wife in July 1983, the same time the $1.1 million disappeared from the John Deere Employees Credit Union in Waterloo, Iowa, where Hadley had worked.

He left a note saying he could no longer cope with the pressures of job and family.

"He's been here since 1984 when he bought a house, but has no visible means of support," Edwards said.

Hadley paid cash for the house and drove around town in a Ferrari and an Alpha Romeo, which he also bought for cash, Edwards said.

"We did a reverse investigation," Edwards said. "We researched how he came into a lot of money. When he bought his house and fancy cars in cash, people were suspicious."

"There was no doubt in my mind it was him when I saw the flier. I was shocked. I probably have 600 pages of reports on this guy from the last three years and he looks the same."

Nicholas V. O'Hara, FBI special agent in charge of the district office at Omaha, said, "Hadley admitted his identity following his arrest."

Authorities believe that after his disappearance, Hadley took a July 21 flight to Chicago, but they were not able to track his movements. He left behind a note to his family saying he took the money and fled because he "could no longer cope with home and work pressures."

In part of the letter included in federal court documents, Hadley wrote to his wife, "This is a very difficult letter to write but I couldn't let you find out from someone else first. If I call you to read this letter, it means that I have successfully left the state with around $1 million from the credit union."

Hadley had worked at the credit union for 10 years and was described as a reliable and respected employee.

His wife, Kathryn, has since divorced Hadley and retained custody of their three children, aged 11, 7 and 1 when their father disappeared.

Hadley, who is charged in Iowa with credit union fraud and embezzlement, is being held in Texas pending an appearance before a U.S. magistrate.

Hopes of catching Hadley rose in February when producers of the "Unsolved Mysteries" program arrived in Waterloo to prepare for a segment on the missing cash and credit union employee.

Largest sapphire called 'Southern Star'

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — A North Carolina gem thought to be the largest blue star sapphire in existence will be called the Southern Star, its owners said Monday.

"The stone was found down South, and I guess we figured that was as appropriate as anything," Craig Peden of Chattanooga said. He is one of two men who found the stone last year.

"We wanted to give it a name to show where it came from," added his partner, Steve Meyer of Blue Ridge, Ga.

The big question facing the two men is whether the corundum gem, estimated at about 1,025 carats, is actually a blue star sapphire, meaning it displays a six-ray star in bright light.

Such stones are rare, and none is the size of theirs. But they think they've got one.

"It has a nice six-legged star," Peden said. "It's the largest blue star sapphire in the world. It turned out to be very, very nice."

But the final word won't come for a couple of weeks, when they will submit the crystal for certification by the Gemological Institute of America in Santa Monica, Calif.

If that group says it's a blue star sapphire, Peden, who runs a dental ceramics business, and Meyer, an X-ray technician, have a chance of becoming millionaires.

"It's on the market immediately," Peden said. "It's a beautiful stone and everything. But as far as being sentimental or anything, no. It's for sale. I can use the money a lot more than I can use (the gem) in a bank vault."

The gem was cut and polished earlier this month by John Robinson, a Texas gem cutter, and will be auctioned by Howard Marcon, president of Amar Inc., a Dallas gem dealer.

Both believe it is a blue star sapphire, but neither has seen the stone in a direct beam light.

"If it's as strong as the owners tell me it is in sunlight, then I think it could be an important stone," Robinson said last week from Plano.
