Muraya's reasoning is more personal — he has lived through injus-

"I became a part of Students Against Apartheid because as a black African I found it hard to accept the misrepresentations of the South African consulate on the events that were occurring in that country," Muraya said.

"I wanted people to know that the official version is not what is actually happening because people were not listening to what the South African people had to say; they only heard what the government said," he said.

SAA President Susan Vint, a sophomore biomedical science major, said she joined the organization in 1986 because she believed the cause was a worthwhile one.

interested in for a long time," she said. "I joined at the start of my freshman year and have been a member ever since.

Luckenbach said although the organization's primary goal is the advancement of what members believe is a moral issue, it is not all work.

"This is the only organization on campus that I know of where people can get together and have fun and yet still support a moral cause the way we do," Luckenbach said.

'Other groups like MSC Great Issues exist, but they look at many issues instead of promoting one," he said. "Anyone with some sense of moral decency will see our cause as a good one.

SAA currently has a membership of between 20 and 30, Vint said.

"People come and go during the semester, because of class or other engagements," she said. "We have about 20 to 30 active members, but I feel that we have a silent majority behind us because although less than 30 attend meetings regularly, we have about 2,000 signatures on our petition for divestment."

Vint said that the organization includes a diverse group of students and faculty members.

We are primarily undergraduate students, but we have a few graduate students and three professors," she said. "We have several international students, including some Indian students, possibly because of the Mus-lim belief for humanitarianism and against oppression of any race."

Although SAA has existed for three years, Luckenbach said it has been plagued by a lack of organiza-

"The problem over the last few semesters has been a lack of leadership," he said.

Vint agreed.
"People had been putting things off and that led to a lack of organization," she said.

Luckenbach said that the many freshmen members and SAA's policy of giving many students a chance to lead have helped the organization's purposes. Now we have a lot of fresh blood that he failed to make the FEC's top 50 list for that category, was contributions and overall fundraising, and ranked 36th for spending.

His $60,161 in PAC contributions put him in 45th place for that category and overall receipts of $365,713 put him in 50th in that category. that category.

Boulter spent $357,763 to emerge from a crowded primary field and defeat wealthy runoff opponent Wes Gilbreath, who spent $770,609 to earn an 18th-place ranking on the FEC list. Boulter's two races left him with $17,874 cash on hand at the end of March.

Bentsen, seeking his fourth term in the Senate, has spent $2 million this election cycle, on his way to crushing little-known primary opponent Joe Sullivan with 85 percent of the vote.

"Bentsen has it to spend — he has unlimited personal wealth and a lot of PAC support, at Boulter has no personal weal and will find fundraising we tough," Texas Republican P. Chairman George Strake said.

Being an incumbent and chairman of the Senate committee that writes tax law puts Bentsen at the receiving end of generous PAC contributions, officials say.

"Bentsen's been in a long time," Strake said. "A lot the law in the law is not the law in the la business community is very warm and cozy with him."

Tom Mason, a spokesman in the National Reublican Senator Committee, said, "Some elements of the Senator of Lloyd Bentse He's got a lot of money in the bank, sits on the most lucration committee on the Hill committee on the Hill committee on the Hill ... you write tax policy? Everyone. He'll use that to great advantage."

In the FEC's top-50 ranking of fundraising and spending by all candidates for the House. Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth, who is unopposed, leads the Texas delegation with $495,681 — a 16th-place ranking overall.
