The National Severe Storms Forecast Center issued tornado watches for more than two dozen counties in north Central and Northwest Texas until 5 p.m. CDT and for about 50 counties in western and Central Texas until 8 p.m.

By mid-afternoon, showers and thunderstorms ranged over southern King County and to the north-east of the South Plains, near the Red River in the extreme southeast Panhandle.

In addition, thunderstorms with heavy to very heavy rainshowers were developing in south Central Texas near College Station.

Late Tuesday morning, storms continued to drench a large part of the Panhandle, where a flash-flood warning was in effect for most counties from Amarillo eastward

A 67-year-old man was killed in a weather-related, three-car accident in Amarillo Tuesday morning, a police spokesman said.

Henry Butler of Amarillo lost control of his car on a slick city street and was killed in the mishap, although police did not know the cause of death Tuesday afternoon, police spokesman Helen Cruz said.

Interstate 40 in western Amarillo was closed for a few hours because of submerged underpasses where a dozen vehicles were stalled, police said. Amarillo authorities received reports of eight accidents and 35 stalled vehicles, Cruz said.

Study: Hurricanes deadlier than predicted

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — A new study shows the death toll from a major hurricane could be far worse than previously predicted, the director of the National Hurricane Center said Tuesday to mark the opening of the 1988 Atlantic storm season.

Forty-three million people live in about 175 coastal counties from Maine to Texas, and evacuating crowded urban areas and barrier islands — like Miami Beach is virtually impossible, Bob Sheets said.

Recently completed hurricane coastal flood models for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts show that many more people than earlier thought must be evacuated under certain conditions, Sheets said.

Sheets said there are not enough shelters to handle the added load. And there are serious concerns how glass-windowed high-rises would fare if lashed by hurricane-force winds during the evacuations.

"Another problem is the 'glass city' problem," said Sheets. "We've not had a strong category three or category four hurricane of record strike a . . . glass city.' Hurricanes are rated on a one-to-five scale with five as the most severe, with winds over 150 mph.

During a weaker hurricane that struck Houston, "glass was flying everywhere," Sheets said.

The Hurricane Center director refused to make predictions about the 1988 season, saying no one has convinced forecasters they can reliably predict the number and severity of the storms.

But as if to underline the need for caution, the first tropical depression of the year formed 150 miles southwest of Havana, Cuba, with 30 mph winds. The system was moving north northwest at 5 mph but was not ex-

It will be harder to track any hurricanes if, as feared, one of the two satellites watching such storms goes out this year, forecasters said.

"It's quite possible this year that we could lose West at anytime," hurricane specialist Bob Cases the Geo-Stationary Earth-Orbiting Environment tellite, which records atmospheric conditions on Pacific Ocean and part of the Western Hemisphert Just as in 1984, when GOES-East expired and less
