Ohio, NY pact fights acid rain

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The governors of Ohio and New York have agreed on an approach to fighting acid rain that balances the interests of coal-producing states and environmental preservation, officials said Sunday night.

Sulfur dioxide emissions from the burning of coal from such states as Ohio long have been blamed as a major cause of acid rain, which environmentalists say is destroying waters and wood-lands in the Northeast.

Gov. Richard Celeste's press secretary, Debra Phillips, said the agreement, which she termed an outline at this point, is a proposal to Congress and would be unveiled Monday. She said the next step is for Celeste and New York Gov. Mario Cuomo to meet with congressional leaders.

The New York Times quoted Cuomo in its Monday editions as calling the agreement "a reasonable and imaginative effort to resolve our differences and solve the problem of acid rain." He said he would "push hard and will keep pushing" to achieve a national program to deal with the is-

Celeste considers the agreement "a balance between preserving jobs and cleaning up the environment," Phillips said.

State Sen. Bob Ney, a Republican, said the agreement is a "hard slap across the face" of Ohio's coal miners.

Ney said Celeste has promised some form of sulfur dioxide emission reductions to fellow Democrat Cuomo, possibly in exchange for New York's dropping of a federal lawsuit the tempts to force emission reductions in coal-

"I've been told that Ohio was agreeing to reduction over a period of years," Ney said Celeste to do this, he would either have to executive order or ask the Ohio Legisla it. He would have run into a brick wall there

Ohio Environmental Protection Agenc tor Richard Shank would not discuss deta day night, but he said the agreement "en clean-coal technology and sulfur dioxide sions reductions . . . and also nitrogen which also is a contributor to acid rain."

Californian officials support limiting growth of population than a century, California has been the promised land for those who heeded the age-old American advice to "go west." But now, the millions who have gone west are causing many others to go to the polls.

Across the state, and particularly in Southern California, voters are being asked to put the brakes on growth, at least until the roads, sewers and water supplies can catch up.
In November's elections in Cali-limiting growth won approval. On Tuesday, voters in Orange County, Pasadena, Hemet and San Marcos are being asked to adopt growth-related initiatives. In rapidly developing northern and western Los Angeles County, Supervisor Mike Antonovich is being chal-lenged by candidates who say he has

And more such challenges and slow-growth measures are in store for November.

"What we have is an authentic rass-roots movement," said Bob Buster, who co-wrote a successful 1979 Riverside growth initiative and who supports a new Riverside County measure.

"We think it's time to fight back,"

The movement started to gather steam in 1986, when Los Angeles voters chose Proposition U as a means to slow growth by cutting housing densities in some areas. Also that year, San Francisco voters passed Measure M, slashing office construction in half for up to 10 years. San F Worries about rapid growth are tivist.

especially severe in Southern California, where the 13.1 million residents of the six-county region are expected to be joined by 5 million others by the year 2010, an amount equal to the population of Indiana.

old city of Moreno Valley, a patch-work of housing tracts and shopping centers, is often cited as an example of growth gone awry. In 10 years, its population has tripled to near 90,000.

Flood control in some areas consists of crude ditches and sand bags. Many schools are surrounded by trailer classrooms, laid like dominos to hold a student population that has more than doubled in four years.
