Dukakis savors nomination win after primaries

(AP) — Michael Dukakis collected endorsements from several vanquished primary rivals on Wednesday as he savored victory in the Democratic presidential race. Jesse Jackson said his candidacy would "remain alive" even as he solicited an invitation to join the ticket as vice presidential candidate.

George Bush, self-described underdog heading into the fall campaign, received words of encouragement from President Reagan. The president also threw a jab in Dukakis' direction, saying, "You know, if I listen to him long enough, I would be convinced that we're in an economic downturn, and that people are homeless, and people are going without food and medical attention, and that we've got to do something about the unemployed."

With the primary season concluded, Dukakis was installed as a pre-election favorite by Ladbroke's, one of London's leading bookmakers.

But Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole predicted the public opinion polls would soon "start moving" in Bush's direction.

Dukakis, who tucked away a delegate nominating majority on Tuesday in the final four primaries of the year, announced in Los Angeles he was ready to begin looking for a vice presidential running mate. He praised Jackson, but said neither he nor anyone else "is due an offer" to join the ticket.

That didn't sound like what Jackson wanted to hear. He said his constituents had "earned the option" of having him considered. "Consideration means an offer. It does not mean just in passing," he said.

He later added that for some people "maybe the vice presidency may be a step down." He added, "You understand my background? The vice presidency is not the top but it is a long way from where I started."

The contrast between Jackson on the one hand and former Dukakis rivals Sen. Paul Simon, Rep. Richard Gephardt and Bruce Babbitt on the other couldn't have been plainer.

Simon of Illinois called a news conference in Washington to declare that the "verdict is in" and he would do "everything I can" to help elect the man from Massachusetts.

Former Arizona Gov. Babbitt offered his backing in a televised interview in California. "It's time to come together," he said. "He's a good man and I'll endorse him."

Gephardt arranged to bestow his blessing publicly when Dukakis' chartered campaign jet touched down in St. Louis for a refueling stop en route to Boston.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo offered an endorsement, as well, in one of the great anticlimaxes of the campaign. Cuomo once was the subject of almost daily rumors that he would make a belated entry into the campaign, and for months his endorsement was coveted by all the active candidates.

"I endorse him, I endorse him, I endorse him," Cuomo told persistent reporters.

But Jackson sent alternately complimentary and confrontational signals to Dukakis. He said whatever differences exist between them "can be resolved," adding, "Both of us are rational. Both of us are intelligent. Both of us want to win."

At the same time, he said his campaign would "remain alive" until the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta next month. He said he would continue to seek delegates and dispatched top aides to Mackinac Island, Mich. for a Democratic Party platform committee drafting session.

Reagan was asked by reporters at the White House what sort of advice he would give to Bush in his race with Dukakis.

"I'd say, George, wait until you and I get out there on the trail, and start pinning him down on the things he claims, which we know are not true," he replied.

Senate Republican leader Dole combined a prediction of a turnaround in the polls with an attack on Dukakis.

Administration ponders expansion of drug war

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is considering expanding its "zero tolerance" war on drug users with the threatened loss of student loans, drivers' licenses and public housing, administration sources said Wednesday.

The Cabinet-level National Drug Policy Board is considering whether to endorse withholding federal aid from state and local governments, colleges and universities and other publicly financed institutions if they don't adopt the anti-drug proposals, which are still in the discussion stage. Attorney General Edwin Meese III chairs the policy board.

Education Secretary William Bennett is trying to steer the Reagan administration away from the proposals.

But if endorsed by the policy board and adopted through a combination of legislation and federal regulation, the proposals would represent an expansion of the administration's zero tolerance program.

Under it, law enforcement officials are seizing cars and boats in which drugs are found, no matter how small the amount.

One approach being discussed, according to other administration sources, would be to have student loan recipients sign a document stating that being a convicted drug user can mean loss of the loan.

Another possible approach would be to make it a federal crime to sell drugs near public housing, similar to the federal schoolyard law making it a federal crime to sell drugs in the vicinity of schools.

A third approach would be to seek to persuade states to revoke the licenses of drivers convicted of drug use. New Jersey currently has such a law.

A proposal under discussion at the policy board calls for state governments to refuse to issue first-time drivers' licenses to minors who have been convicted of drug use.

National Briefs

Wright asks to go before ethics panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright said Wednesday he has asked the ethics committee to invite him to testify so he can refute charges that he violated conflict of interest rules.

"I believe I can put all the allegations to rest," said Wright, D-Texas. "If the committee will give priority to looking at each and every (charge) . . . it will discover I have violated no rule and certainly violated no commonly accepted ethical standard."

"I would like for it to be done at the earliest possible time."

Wright, who has been named chairman of the Democratic National Convention next month in Atlanta, has called the charges a Republican attempt to embarrass him and the party. However, the speaker said Wednesday he has not heard concerns from other Democrats that the effort could succeed.

The ethics committee began last week to examine charges against Wright filed by political enemy Newt Gingrich, R-Ga. Common Cause, a non-partisan group which monitors government ethics, also called for a probe of Wright's actions.

The panel, still deciding whether to launch a formal inquiry, planned to meet again Tuesday. Wright was not expected to testify this week, his office said.

Gingrich's complaint surfaced when he lobbied on behalf of companies in cases in which he had a financial stake, and in accepting an unusually large royalty contract from a friend and campaign contractor who published his book.

U.S. House kills home health care bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday killed a $28 billion plan for long-term home health care, giving its chief sponsor a standing ovation but ultimately bowing to arguments that the bill was poorly drawn and too costly.

The vote was 243-169 to block floor consideration of the new Medicare benefit proposed by Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla.

The long-term home health care act would have provided services to the disabled and chronically ill of all ages. An estimated 2.2 million people would have qualified for the benefit in 1990.

Under a special arrangement, the bill reached the floor without going through any committees — which led powerful Democratic committee chairmen and many of their colleagues to align themselves with most of the Republican members to bury the proposal.

"The whole democratic process was sideswiped," said House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill. "Why has this bill not gone through the normal committee process? Perhaps because sponsors realize that it would never hold up under the close scrutiny to which it would be subjected."

Pepper, 87, revered by senior citizens nationwide for his work on their causes, said he had water and worked for this day for 5 years.

"When are we going to have another opportunity if we lose this one?" he asked, tears filling his eyes. "Think about the human values involved in this matter and vote to help those people who need this help."

Pepper charged that his opponents were interested only in killing his bill and using the money that would have financed it for other purposes.

Lawmaker says INS agents harrassed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas congressman is investigating allegations the Immigration and Naturalization Service punished and harassed agents who complained that administrators assigned work that jeopardized their undercover identities and told them to falsify time cards.

U.S. Rep. Jack Brooks said he requested the General Accounting Office investigation because although the INS is "treading a little more carefully until the heat dies down," its top-ranking officials "in their minds think they have done nothing wrong."

The alleged reprisals began after all eight agents in the Houston anti-smuggling unit told Congress they were being reassigned part of the time to contact employers about the new immigration law and sanctions for hiring illegal aliens.

They were allegedly told to record those duties as anti-smuggling work on their time cards.

"On rare occasions you find overzealous administrators who cover up their mistakes by persecuting the people who talk about it, but never have I seen it with the terrible dangers this one reflects for the participants," Brooks said Monday.

Brooks, a Beaumont Democrat and chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, contends the agents' safety was threatened when they had to meet employers who may have been hiring illegal aliens.

"I'd hate to be an undercover agent traveling around and visiting those big employers of aliens. They'd recognize you; you'd stand out like a sore thumb," Brooks said.

Graduation canceled in fear of suicide

FAIRVIEW, Pa. (AP) — Officials canceled final exams and graduation for the senior class at Fairview High School, saying they feared a group of students planned to commit suicide or other violence during ceremonies.

"It's more than just pranks," Frank Kroto, Fairview School District solicitor, said Wednesday. "It's more than the typical end of the year dissatisfaction with authority."

Kroto also said several school administrators received personal threats and were being protected by police. He did not give details but state police said troopers were patrolling near some administrators' homes.

Officials said they have evidence of a suicide pact among friends of a senior who fatally shot himself at home with a .44-caliber Magnum handgun on Christmas in the presence of another student. Officials said another, similar handgun was stolen from the dead student's home and has not been recovered.
