Prosecutor gives reasons in venue choice

SAN DIEGO, Texas (AP) — The chief prosecutor for 10 local men indicted in an alleged gang rape and kidnapping said he did not try to have the trial moved to another county because he does not believe he could prove community-wide lawlessness or a conspiracy within the community.

Sympathy from relatives and friends of the defendants would not necessarily hamper selection of a fair and impartial jury in the South Texas community of about 5,000, said Rodolfo Gutierrez, first assistant district attorney for the 229th Judicial District.

"It's very difficult for us to ask for a change of venue," Gutierrez said Tuesday.

"We would have to show lawlessness in the community or some sort of conspiracy" to move the trial, Gutierrez said. "And I don't believe that to be true."

Nor have attorneys representing the 10 men indicted on charges of sexual assault and/or aggravated kidnapping and kidnapping asked for changes of venue.

The 19-year-old woman, also a San Diego resident at the time of the March 26 incident, told authorities that she was kidnapped and raped by 12 to 15 men over a period of several hours.

One of the witnesses in the case is a 12-year-old boy who reportedly has been ostracized by his playmates since he started cooperating with authorities.

"It's definitely going to be difficult for the victim and the 12-year-old boy to testify . . . (The woman) is upset with the whole thing, and that's understandable," Gutierrez said. "But she is ready to testify."

The prosecutor said the boy also is ready for the first trial, scheduled for July 11.

The defendants are being tried individually on the sexual assault charges and in groups in the kidnapping cases.

Judge Ricardo H. Garcia has set bonds at $100,000 for each aggravated kidnapping charge and $50,000 on each sexual assault charge.

Railey's wife's doctor claims she's better, but not healed

DALLAS (AP) — A former minister's wife who was choked nearly to death 14 months ago has improved, a doctor said Wednesday, but he added there's no way to know whether she will ever communicate again after hospital therapy.

Margaret "Peggy" Railey, who has been comatose since being attacked in the garage of her Dallas home, entered Baylor Institute for Rehabilitation under tight security Tuesday for a comprehensive evaluation and rehabilitation. Railey is the wife of a former prominent Methodist minister, Walker Railey, who resigned his ministerial credentials and moved to California after the April 21, 1987 attack.

No criminal charges have been filed, but Railey's attorney has characterized him as the prime suspect in the attack. Authorities say their investigation is at a standstill.

Doctors will try both to bring Railey out of the coma and develop therapies to improve her long term comfort and care during the program, which could last two months, said Dr. William L. Parker, medical director for the institute.

"If we can establish anything that seems to stimulate a response that could be interpreted as functional, then we would continue to try, through repetition, to improve on that and then other responses would follow," Parker said at a news conference. Railey, 39, was taken to a Tyler nursing home last fall after months of care at another Dallas hospital.

Parker said his team is making the first comprehensive evaluation of Railey's injuries at the request of her parents.

"There has been what looks like some slight improvement in her condition" over months, Parker said, adding her eyes sometimes focus and follow movement. Railey can turn her head and hear, but doesn't process what she hears.

He said he didn't think his team of 12 specialist therapists would be able to completely determine whether Railey will communicate again.

"There's no total way to tell," Parker said. "I think that she will never, no. I think the odds are pretty good going to be against it, but time is only thing that counts to tell."

"If there's any indication at all that we can pick up all of our treatment that's going to be helpful to help bring any, slight even, communication either for the family's sake and for her sake, the whole psychological aspect of her care is going to be changed."

Railey, former senior pastor at the First Methodist Church in Dallas, said he found his wife unconscious on the garage floor of their home during the attack.

Not long afterward, Railey attempted suicide. She moved to San Francisco with a Dallas psychiatrist, Lucy Papillon, who admitted a romantic relationship with Railey dating back to Railey's parents' filed lawsuit that accused their son-in-law in the attack.

Railey failed to respond to the suit and a July 1987 April found him financially liable in the incident.

Parker said he did not know if police would take Railey while she was in Dallas, but said the hospital taken "extra security" measures for Railey was an enter organist and her parents have been concerned that dexterity be maintained in her fingers and hands.

Parker said her therapy at Baylor will include stimulation.

The Railey's two pre-school age children, who have been living with friends since the attack, will be with their mother, he said.

Insurance is paying for the rehabilitation program, Parker said, but he would not estimate the cost. The $350 per day room expense.

Government awards funds to B-CS for local housing

The federal government has awarded $134,000 to the city of Bryan and $206,000 to Brazos County to provide housing assistance to low income families.

The money can be used to pay rent for needy families, to create more housing and to aid housing officials with more operating assistance.

Anna Laura Klesel, director of housing for the Brazos Valley Development Council, said families seeking aid must meet criteria based on guidelines handed down from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

"Those who live in substandard housing, those who pay at least 50 percent of their income to rent and utilities and those who have been involuntarily displaced are eligible for application to the Rental Rehabilitation Program," Klesel said.

We provide assistance to very low income families who earn 50 percent of the median income," she said. "And under special circumstances, we can aid low income families who earn 80 percent of the median income, but the program was established for the neediest families and it is those families that we will help first."

Glenn Cook, a Brazos Valley Development Council official, said, "From the $134,024, the city of Bryan can help 14 renters for 168 months and from the $206,198 awarded to Brazos County, 20 renters can be helped for 240 months."

"There are seven counties that cover in Brazos Valley. In the approximately 1,000 families receiving aid in the form of rent from the Rental Rehabilitation program right now."

Klesel said 748 families are waiting list in Brazos County rental assistance.

"The allocations are not our total needs, but more than supposed to be coming in. I apply for additional funding time and will keep applying to fill our needs, if that's ever possible."

The program began August 1985 in connection with the Station Rental Rehabilitation program.

College Station does not have active rental assistance program. Dan Fette from the city of Station Community Development Council said a canvassing effort begin this month in College Station to generate response for the program.
