Engineers release preliminary report about store's roof

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Officials may never know why a Texas department store collapsed, killing 14 people, but a preliminary report will be available this week, an engineer investigating the accident said Wednesday.

"I don't think we're going to be able to pinpoint a cause," Garry G. Nichols said. "We're working on it now."

Nichols and Glenn J. Winslow, civil engineers with Birmingham-based Southern Building Code Congress International Inc., were in Brownsville for three days after the three-story Amigo Store collapsed Thursday.

The engineers, the primary investigators of the collapse, said their job has been made more difficult because important building records have been unavailable.

"We've been told that the building department has moved two or three times over the period of time when the building was built and some of the records may have been involved in a flood," Nichols said.

The store was built in 1969 and the third floor was added about 1975, Nichols said.

He said the city still is going through its records, which were stored in several locations, in search of the construction plans. Nichols said Brownsville building official Tony Yzaguirre has said the records may have been lost.

Nichols said they had not found the architect or engineer of the building but that the city has contacted the contractor, who had no copy of the construction specifications.

Nichols and Winslow said their investigation also was hampered by sketchy information from witnesses.

Winslow said in several months a complete report will follow this week's release of a preliminary report.

Nichols said, "Although we don't expect to have any answers, we do hope to keep the lines of communication open."

Aquarium site may be built over artifacts

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Historians are digging trenches in search of musket balls, cannon balls and old bottles at the site of the future Texas State Aquarium, where Gen. Zachary Taylor once oversaw a pre-Civil War camp.

Meanwhile, work on the aquarium project at Corpus Christi Beach halted temporarily.

The city hired James E. Warren, a professional archaeologist, after a review of the aquarium site showed it is located exactly where 4,000 U.S. troops were stationed under Taylor in 1845-46.

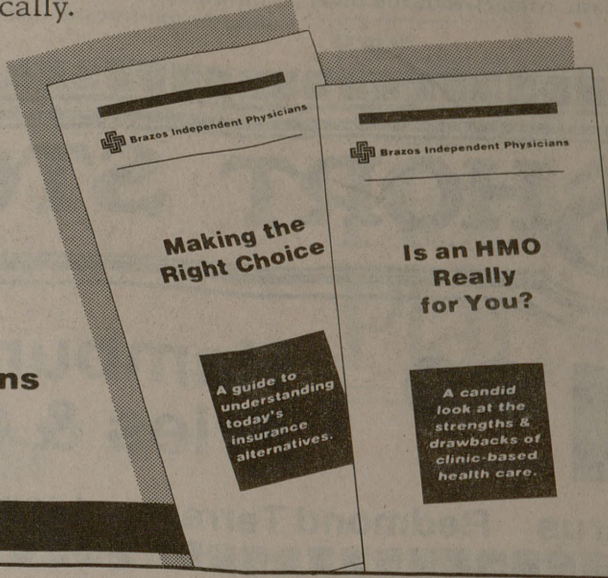

The Texas Antiquities Code stipulates that the Texas Antiquities Commission may comment on historical disturbances of buildings that use public funds.

"They (the commission) commented that this area is historically important and should at least have the opportunity to be looked at," Warren said.

When Taylor arrived in Corpus Christi, the Mexican government protested, because it said the area between the Nueces River and the Rio Grande was not a part of Texas.

Is an HMO Really for you?

Actually, a clinic-based HMO could be the best choice for you and your family. For those who spend a majority of their monthly income on medical bills, such programs can provide substantial savings. The same may be true for those already obtaining their medical care from the sponsoring clinic. But others have found the restrictions imposed by HMO participation too limiting. For example, you'll have to switch from your current doctor to one employed by the HMO. You'll lose your present PCS card. You'll forfeit your present dental coverage. You may occasionally be required to leave the city for certain specialized tests and procedures — even when those services are available locally. Only traditional medical insurance guarantees your freedom of choice in health care. Before you surrender that freedom, take the time to be sure an HMO is the best choice for you.
