H. Ross Perot joins in fight against casinos

GALVESTON (AP) — Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot has joined in the fight against legalized gambling in Texas, pledging $10,000 to help defeat a move to establish casinos in this island city.

Perot, who agreed to contribute the money Wednesday, said gambling is a sad joke on the state and he compared it to the deadly disease AIDS.

The money he pledged will go a group fighting a measure that would legalize gambling casinos by creating a casino-district in the Southeast Texas resort city.

"If this happens in Galveston, it could be a disease that goes across the state," Perot said. "It's like AIDS. If you get it anywhere, it can spread."

Voters will go to the polls Aug. 13 in Galveston to decide whether they want area legislators to seek passage of laws that could lead to legalized casino gambling.

The election was scheduled after the pro-gambling group Galvestonians for Economic Development gathered enough registered voters' signatures to force the election.

Perot made the donation after Steven Long, hired to represent another group, Galvestonians Against Casino Gambling, asked him to contribute to the anti-gambling campaign and take a public stand on the issue.

Long told the Dallas businessman that Las Vegas and Atlantic City casino operators pledged to spend $150,000 to convince Galveston voters that casino gambling will revive the city's sagging economy.

Organizations that won hard-fought anti-gambling majorities in 1984 and 1987 fear they may be out-gunned financially the third time around, Long said in a letter to Perot. Anti-gambling forces spent about $35,000 to defeat a January 1987 legalized gambling proposal.

Gambling will not solve the financial woes of Galveston or the state, Perot said Wednesday.

"I believe, as we restructure Texas away from an oil and gas economy to a diversified economy and industrial base, the last thing we need is to try to build a state based on horse racing and casino gambling and dog racing and lotteries," Perot said.

"We'd better get down to basics and create good jobs for our people and do it in the old-fashioned way, through a good educational system and hard work."

The president of Dallas-based Pratt Hotel Corp., Jack Pratt, said recently his firm will build a $150 million casino-hotel in Galveston if such operations are legalized.

Las Vegas interests have added funds to pro-gambling funds along with Galveston's own Central Cities Development Co.

A&M students dance topless at local lounge

By Theresa Emmert
Reporter

Topless dancers at the Silk Stocking Lounge in College Station have found a unique opportunity to make money while going to school.

The lounge, located on Highway 6 one mile south of College Station, has three topless dancers — one is enrolled at Texas A&M, a second is taking a semester off and a third who plans to enroll in the fall semester.

The owner of the lounge, Oleta Dopslauf, said it is hard to get college girls to come dance because they are not willing to work hard.

Dancers work Monday through Saturday from 7 p.m. to midnight for tips only.

The dancers, who asked to be identified by their stage names, are Sugar, 21, Chasmere, 22, and Page, 22. Page and Chasmere have been working at the lounge for a week and Sugar has been there for four weeks.

To make money as a dancer, Dopslauf said, the girls have to be friendly, smile a lot, like music, be graceful and dedicated to their jobs. She said when a good dancer is on stage, she glows and is at ease.

Dopslauf said the art of dancing has been around since biblical times. "It is definitely an art," Dopslauf said.

Chasmere said most people think the girls are whores because they are topless dancers, but they are only entertainers.

"The job is entertainment," she said. "We don't go to bed with the customers."

All three dancers like their job but said they need to get more tips and a commission for dancing.
