Drought relief may be delayed by funding cuts

By Susan B. Erb
Reporter

The federal government has eliminated national funding for weather modification studies, an area of research that could possibly provide small-scale relief to areas of the parched nation.

Dr. Phanindramohan Das, a meteorology professor at Texas A&M, defined weather modification as any process that changes weather conditions from what they normally would have been.

"But in modern terms, when we talk about weather modification we mean changing the precipitation we get from a cloud system," Das said.

A cloud with intermediate precipitation potential — a cloud that might have produced rain anyway — is seeded with silver iodide, creating a few particles of ice where there were none and speeding up the natural rain process.

Robert Riggio, chief of the weather and climate section of the Texas Water Commission, said the government's decision to eliminate funding for weather modification was made in the spring, before the drought had set in. He said he believes that if the drought had occurred while the House Appropriations Committee was discussing the issue, the funding would have been continued.

"The interest in weather modification is soluble in rain water," Riggio said.

"Three years from now when another drought hits and the interest builds back up they will start all over again," he said.

Dr. James Scoggins, head of meteorology at A&M, said although cloud seeding is not the answer to nationwide drought, on a local scale it could conceivably provide some relief from blistering heat and bone-dry fields.

"If you are looking at drought on a large scale, as the one occurring over most of the country, weather modification could not have prevented it," Scoggins said. "But on the other hand, if you are looking at it locally, for example in the Brazos Valley, then the answer is probably, 'yes, weather modification could help.'"

Das said cloud seeding over the mountain slopes of Colorado has proven successful, increasing snowfall by as much as 10 percent, thereby increasing water supply for streams, towns and irrigation.

"I am convinced that sound scientific research of this kind should continue," Das said.

Attorney says Jackson's plea inspired him

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A millionaire attorney, saying he was inspired by the Rev. Jesse Jackson's call to help others, hired an ambulance Monday to transport a critically ill reporter from Mexico City to Texas.

Scott Lind, 34, who covered politics for the Mexico City News, has been in the American British Cowdry Hospital in Mexico City since slipping into a coma on July 13.

Doctors have said that Lind, who previously worked for the McAllen Monitor, is suffering from viral encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain.

Lind's parents, Lloyd and Eleanor Lind of San Antonio, have tried to get their son back to Texas, where he could receive better care, but they lacked funds because the reporter did not have medical insurance.

On Monday, attorney Frank Herrera presented Lind a check for $3,200 to pay for an air station transport.

Man dies in Texas jail from acute cocaine intoxication

ADDISON (AP) — An Addison man died in jail of acute cocaine intoxication after his arrest when he crashed a van into a fence, officials said Monday.

Vernon Drake, 28, was pronounced dead on arrival at RHD Memorial Medical Center Sunday morning.

The Dallas County medical examiner office ruled acute cocaine intoxication the cause of Drake's death.

Drake was arrested on suspicion of driving while intoxicated. Addison Police Chief Rick Sullivan said Drake had to be subdued after the accident.

Acute cocaine intoxication causes the heart to beat so rapidly it becomes irregular and eventually fails. Strenuous physical exertion can contribute to the failure.

Sullivan said Drake apparently was trying to seek medical attention when the accident occurred. Sullivan said the man's girlfriend notified police at 9:45 a.m. that he called her about 7 a.m. saying he wasn't feeling well and was going to a fire station nearby.

Officers struggled with the man when he resisted arrest, but paramedics examined him and determined he was fit for jail, police Sgt. L.P. Nolen said.

Dog show to be held in College Station

The Brazos Valley Kennel Club and Aggie Dog Owners Group will sponsor a weekend of dog shows Saturday and Sunday at Louis Pearce Pavilion.

These matches are the final scheduled preparation matches leading up to the largest dog show in the country to be held in Houston next month.

About 300 dogs from Texas are expected to compete in a variety of classes to be judged according to sex, age, breed and obedience.

In addition to obedience matches beginning at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, a series of specialty shows will feature an Australian shepherd show and rare breeds such as the Chinese Crested, Arabash, Shiba Inew and Chinese Shar-pei.

Dog owners may compete in showmanship matches on pedigree, junior, senior and senior plus (over 45 in dog years) levels.

Dog supplies will be on sale and a photographer will be present. Admission is free to the public and barbeque will be sold.

The registration fee is $4 prior to Wednesday or $5 at the door. Fees may be mailed to Brenda Martz, show chairman, at Room 4, Box 425 C, College Station, Texas, 77840.

Republican gripe may force Dukakis to wait for funding

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis was greeted by cheering Massachusetts state employees Monday when he returned to the governor's office for the first time since winning the Democratic presidential nomination. But a Republican complaint was likely to force him to wait for $46 million in federal campaign funds.

"This will probably add some time to the deliberative process," Sharon Snyder, a Federal Election Commission spokeswoman, said of a GOP request that federal money be held up until the FEC can rule on questions raised by Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's pursuit of the vice presidency and re-election to the Senate at the same time.

Vice President George Bush, like Dukakis, was off the campaign trail after winding up a trip Sunday night. Bush was polishing a speech in which he planned to call for tougher ethical standards for government officials and members of Congress.

As for Bentsen's races, Jann Olsten, executive director of the Republican Senate Campaign committee, said Monday, "There is no question that one is going to impact the other."

"A dollar spent by Sen. Bentsen in Texas, whether for the Senate or the vice presidential campaign, is going to directly and immediately benefit both," said Olsten. "It just isn't fair."

An unusual Texas law permits Bentsen to run for vice president at the same time he is on the ballot for re-election to the Senate.

Bentsen's latest campaign report showed him with $3.9 million on hand for his Senate race against GOP challenger Beau Boulter.

While there is no lid on how much he can spend on his Senate campaign, federal law limits direct expenditures in the presidential campaign to the federal campaign fund — divided equally between the two party candidates.

Dukakis campaign spokesman Leslie Dach shrugged off the possible delay in receipt of the $46 million.

"Our campaign is moving a steam ahead with plenty of momentum from the convention," he said.

One sign of the kind of momentum cheering the Dukakis campaign was a new poll taken in Texas by Peter Hart Research Associates.

The survey of 502 likely voters Friday and Saturday, the two days immediately following the Democratic Convention, said Dukakis favored by 50 percent and Bush 40 percent. A pre-convention survey in Texas by Hart had the two candidates tied at 46 percent each.

Bush was spending the week in Washington, attending to other duties.

He will deliver a speech Tuesday at the Library of Congress on ethics in government, prescribing "standards" to prevent conflict of interest by federal officials, including members of Congress.

Bush wants a strengthened ethics in the White House.

The speech, long in the making, was delayed until the release of a report by independent counsel James M. McKay on Attorney General Edwin Meese, which said Meese probably broke two tax laws twice violated a criminal conflict interest statute. McKay sought charges.

Separately, an inmate at the Government Center in Dallas was electrocuted in an apparent accident.

Billy Dan Russem, 34, of Vernon, stepped on a shower at the jail Saturday afternoon, sat down and was electrocuted when he plugged in an electric heater to make himself a cup of coffee.

Russem was to have been transferred Monday to the Texas Department of Corrections in Huntsville to begin a 25-year sentence for drug possession, said County Sheriff's spokesman Jim Ewell.
