Dallas County storage tanks may be leaking

DALLAS (AP) — Some of the estimated 14,000 petroleum storage tanks that lie beneath Dallas County soil are aging bombs, environmental workers say, because they may be leaking gasoline into underground water supplies.

State and federal officials have intensified efforts to find leaking tanks and force their owners to repair or replace them but some leaks go undetected. The substances that seep from the tanks may pose a threat to health and safety, and have done tens of millions of dollars in damage to the environment.

"There are just a huge number of tanks out there, a number of which have the potential to leak in the not-too-distant future," Blake Early said.

Early, as a Sierra Club representative, helped draft federal legislation governing underground tanks.

"The damage they can do to groundwater is huge; it only takes a very small amount of gasoline to render a source of underground drinking water useless," Early said.

"It's one of those issues that, in our view, is a sleeper in terms of its impact on public health."

The highly flammable gasoline contains benzene, a known carcinogen that can be harmful.

Two years ago, a Mineral Wells man died two years ago when he flipped a light switch in his house, igniting gasoline that had seeped into the house from a nearby tank.

About 50 cases have been documented in Texas of private wells tainted by leaking tanks. For example, leaking tanks in Dallas have damaged underground telephone cables because gasoline eats away at the cables' protective coating.

Education complex names chancellor amidst investigation

KILLEEN (AP) — A new leader took command of the American Educational Complex on Monday, vowing to restore its reputation in the face of official displeasure and a state agency's investigation.

Jim Anderson succeeds Phillip R. Swartz, who resigned last week, only four months after he succeeded Luis Morton Jr. as chancellor.

The AEC board of trustees appointed Anderson, the college's deputy chancellor for college programs, as acting chancellor and indicated it would give Anderson the opportunity to be named to the post.

Anderson, 50, has academic and administrative experience, and was hired by the complex less than a year ago.

Pentagon came to the AEC for the complex after stories revealed questionable business practices.

The reports detailed the complex's use of a travel agency owned by Swartz's daughter, a $475,000 pension plan loan to Morton Swartz's purchase of $1 million Taiwanese microcomputer equipment without bids and the involvement of the complex in a gold mine.

Fencing for construction surrounds two dormitories

By Julie Mitchell
Reporter

Students living in McFadden and Haas halls this summer woke up one Saturday morning to find themselves fenced in.

The area in front of the two residence halls, as well as the staff parking lot to the north of them, is entirely enclosed by a 6-foot chain link fence.

The fences are the beginning of a 10-month project to build five new residence halls.

"My dorm looks like a maximum security prison," said Elizabeth Logan, a junior economics major from Houston who is living in Haas for the summer semesters.

But the appearance is not the only problem the hall construction will cause.

Another 6-foot fence was installed on the south side of campus, blocking off about 300 parking places, Saul Garcia, the superintendent in charge of building the halls, said.

Garcia said three of the halls will be built in what is now the Commons parking lot. A fourth southside hall will be built next to Underwood Hall in what used to be a parking lot.

Garcia said Mosher Lane will remain open to allow access to the loading dock behind the Commons. Spence Street, from Moser Lane halfway to Lewis Street, will be closed.

The construction also will bring early-morning noise.

Garcia said his workers, about 150 of them, will start working at 7 a.m. every day, with the high noise level continuing for the entire 10 months.

"Even when we get toward the end of the project, we'll still have the dozers out there," Garcia said.

Students who live in McFadden and Haas halls won't be able to use their usual exits or bicycle racks for the next 10 months.

Garcia said students will have to walk around the halls to get to Houston Street.

"It takes me twice as long to get anywhere," said Dr. Elizondo, a sophomore biochemistry major from McAllen and summer Haas resident.

Garcia said A&M has ordered new bicycle racks, but students must find a new place to park their bikes until they come in.

Garcia said none of the fenced off area on the south side will be reopened for parking. He said landscaping and sidewalks will replace the lot.

The parking lot on the northside, next to Haas, will be reopened when the project is finished.

Garcia said all cars parked in the fenced-off areas will be towed if they aren't moved by today.

"We figured that students who went home for the weekend wouldn't know to move their cars until Monday," Garcia said. "We won't start towing until Tuesday morning."

Garcia said the new halls will be open in the fall of 1989.

Track delays cause revenue loss

AUSTIN (AP) — The delay in getting Texas pari-mutuel horse and dog racing out of the gate means the state government won't be taking in as much money as soon as had been thought, Comptroller Bob Bullock said Monday.

"If you don't run, you don't make money," said Tony Proffitt, spokesman for the comptroller's office.

Bullock earlier had forecast that the state would take in $3.59 million from legalized race track gambling in the 1988 budget year, which ends Aug. 31, and $22 million in the 1989 budget year.

But in a letter to Racing Commission Chairman Hilary Doran, Bullock said he now was being forced to push back his estimates by a year.

His new forecast now projects $3.25 million in 1989 and $20.3 million in 1990.

"The original estimate no longer holds any water because the projections that they were going to be up and running by '88 didn't come true," Proffitt said.

Voters last November approved a referendum legalizing pari-mutuel wagering on horse and dog racing in Texas for the first time in 50 years.

However, the Racing Commission that was formed in January has yet to hire an executive director, issue rules to govern racing and wagering, or license any tracks to conduct pari-mutuel racing.

"The time it's taken to get the full racing commission appointed and for the commission to develop its policies and rules means that none of the $3.5 million the state had expected to go into the treasury during the current 1988 budget year has been realized, with just one month left before the state closes the books on '88," Bullock wrote.

"This means we're pushing back our projections of revenue by a year. The state can expect racing to generate about the same amount of money in each of the years to come, but time we've lost getting started has pushed that money another year into the future," Bullock said.

The Racing Commission has sued proposed rules to govern pari-mutuel horse and dog racing, and those rules now being considered at a series of public hearings being held around the state.

Doran said last week he hoped the commission can hire an executive director at its September meeting.

The chairman also has proposed that existing race tracks will be licensed and pari-mutuel racing started sometime in the spring of 1989.

Bullock's latest projections of state revenue from pari-mutuel wagering also call for $42.2 million in the 1991 fiscal year.

Proffitt said it now appeared the revenues won't top $100 million until the 1993 budget year.
