Scientist: Man must act now to prevent earth's warming

By Susan B. Erb
 Reporter

Rising shorelines, spreading deserts and increasing global temperatures could become irreversible facts of life on Earth if man does not curtail his destruction of forests and burning of fossil fuels, scientists studying the greenhouse effect warn.

Michael Flynn, meteorologist in charge of the National Weather Service's Southwest Agricultural Weather Service Center, said the earth can be considered a giant greenhouse with atmospheric gases acting as glass.

"In a greenhouse," Flynn said, "short-wave solar radiation passes through the glassed roof and is converted to long-wave, infrared radiation. This long-wave energy, in the form of heat, is trapped in the greenhouse by the opacity of the glass to infrared radiation."

On a global scale, Flynn said, incoming solar radiation can pass through the gases in earth's atmosphere, but once converted to heat, it is trapped.

The main culprit, he said, is carbon dioxide, a by-product of the combustion of fossil fuels.

Since 1958, carbon dioxide concentrations in the atmosphere have increased 25 percent, upsetting nature's thermostat and causing mean global temperatures to begin to rise. The first five months of 1988 were the warmest in the past 100 years — as far back as the records go.

Predictions of impending consequences include melting polar ice caps, rising sea levels, spreading deserts and shrinking forests.

Destruction of tropical forests — for lumber, agriculture or by acid rain — and burning of fossil fuels for energy and for transportation, work as partners in the production of surplus carbon dioxide.

Dr. A. John Appleby, director of Texas A&M's Center for Electrochemistry, said researchers in California are working on a method of coproduction of electricity and hydrogen from coal. Hydrogen, Appleby said, is the ideal source of energy — it doesn't emit carbon dioxide into the atmosphere.

The obvious but not-so-easily-achieved solutions to the problem are a dramatic decrease in the destruction of Earth's forests and development of energy sources that don't emit carbon dioxide. Hydrogen is one such source.

Reforestation efforts, combined with development of carbon dioxideless energy sources, could minimize the greenhouse effect. And it is not only diminished photosynthesis that renders deforestation a threat.

Dr. J. P. van Buijtenen, department head of Reforestation at the Texas Forest Service, said that most of wood's carbon is tied up in lignum and cellulose compounds, which are converted to carbon dioxide when wood is burned, adding to deforestation's role in the greenhouse effect.

Reforestation efforts, van Buijtenen said, are being started around the world. He said that India and China have embarked on massive reforestation programs.

Any carbon dioxide that did result from the production process," Appleby said, "could be disposed of in liquid form in the deep ocean, with no environmental consequences at all."

Those not responding to the rescheduling letters, however, are threatened with possible denial of their amnesty applications, according to a second notice being mailed this week.

Members of the Legalization Coalition of the Rio Grande Valley, a self-styled immigrant advocacy group, said many amnesty applicants in the lower Rio Grande Valley who originally had interviews scheduled as late as December have traveled out of the area to seek work during the interim.

"We strongly believe that the applicants should not lose their once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to legalize their status simply because of the whim of the INS," said coalition member Carter White, an attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union.

But Ellen Pesserillo, an assistant outreach specialist with the INS 13 state southern region based in Dallas, said the language in the second notice "is intended to motivate people to come in and reschedule."

The INS spokesman said she does not expect amnesty applications to be denied because of a failure to show up for the rescheduled interviews.

"It doesn't say your application will be denied . . . it says it may be," Pesserillo said.

by Scott McCullar INS measure creates worry among aliens

SAN JUAN (AP) — Immigrant advocates said Thursday a new government cost-cutting measure threatens to deny legal status to many undocumented aliens who applied for amnesty under the new migration law.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service last month sent letters to thousands of aliens nationwide advising them that their initial interviews had been changed to an earlier date.

INS officials said the interviews were rescheduled to cut costs and to clear a backlog of applications before the end of the federal fiscal year on Sept. 30, and to clear the way for the second phase of the amnesty program.

Those not responding to the rescheduling letters, however, are threatened with possible denial of their amnesty applications, according to a second notice being mailed this week.

Members of the Legalization Coalition of the Rio Grande Valley, a self-styled immigrant advocacy group, said many amnesty applicants in the lower Rio Grande Valley who originally had interviews scheduled as late as December have traveled out of the area to seek work during the interim.

Members appointed to juvenile justice panel

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements on Thursday appointed 33 Texans, including former Houston Oiler Earl Campbell, to a panel that will monitor and recommend improvements to the state's juvenile justice and delinquency prevention programs.

"This advisory board will ensure that the state's efforts in this regard are first-rate," he said.

"Our war on crime will not be successful unless we fight the battle on all fronts. The war cannot be won without confronting our juvenile crime problem head-on," Clements said in a statement.

The statewide Governor's Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Advisory Board will review all Texas applications for federal juvenile justice and delinquency prevention grants, and submit an annual report on the status of the state's efforts to reduce crime committed by Texas youths.
