Rescue efforts lower rate of fatalities after crash

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Minutes after a Delta jet crashed in flames Wednesday, emergency response teams mounted a massive rescue effort that helped to keep the fatality count miraculously low.

Thirteen died when the Boeing 727 crashed and burned on takeoff for a flight to Salt Lake City, Delta officials said.

Some of those involved in rescuing the 94 passengers from Flight 1141 were flooded with memories of what happened three years ago when another Delta jet crashed at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, killing 137.

Others credited the 1985 accident with improvements in their rescue methods.

"Flight 191 definitely gave us more experience," said Mike Sympton, paramedic supervisor for the airport police and fire department. "When we got here, it was click, click, click."

Sympton arrived aboard one of the first three emergency vehicles at the crash scene just three minutes after the 9:03 a.m. accident at the airport's west end.

Dozens of area fire trucks and helicopters and police vehicles converged on the prairie field southwest of the main airport tower, and within 10 minutes some of the first victims were being transported to local area hospitals.

Sympton and the first to arrive concentrated their efforts on establishing a triage area where crash survivors could be medically evaluated so the most seriously injured could be sent to area hospitals first.

Brian McKinney, an airport Department of Public Safety officer, was off-duty when he heard about the crash on the news and came in to work about 9:40 a.m.

"I just helped pull bodies out — about nine," said McKinney. "They were charred. Some of them were in seats. Some of them weren't in seats. Some had belts, we had to take off."

"The ones that I pulled out were in the back of the plane," he said.

The paramedics said all they were told only that the plane was a Boeing 727. It wasn't until thick black smoke cleared about 15 or 20 minutes later that they discovered they were working on another Delta plane.

Sympton said the crash of Flight 1141 appeared very similar to Flight 191.

Bush promises reduction in U.S. acid rain amounts

From Associated Press

Republican George Bush promised action to reduce acid rain on Wednesday and declared "I am an environmentalist." Rival Michael Dukakis shot back: "Talk about an election-year convert."

Seeking to gain the initiative after two weeks of moribund campaigning, the Democratic presidential nominee delivered a broad attack on Bush for a second day, ridiculing his statements on the environment and demanding an explanation of his role in the Iran-Contra debate.

Bush, campaigning in Michigan, avoided mention of his rival's name — a new course after weeks of calculated attacks. But his Republican running mate Dan Quayle picked up the cudgel and denounced Dukakis as a "defeatist liberal."

The Republicans continued to poke fun at Dukakis's aged snow blower that became a symbol of his frugality at the Democratic convention.

"His ideas are as old as that 25-year-old snow blower," Quayle said in Baton Rouge, La.

Dukakis campaign strategists were targeting Quayle, the Indiana senator whose selection stunned even Republican insiders. Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich said they would depict his selection as an indication of poor judgment by Bush, and would make that one of the central themes of the fall campaign.

"One issue we are certain to hear more of from Democrats across the board is the selection of Senator Quayle and his record and qualifications," she said at a briefing in Boston.

Quayle was unbowed by the prospect of two more months of personal attack, saying, "I can stand the heat and I'll stay in the kitchen."

A new ABC-Washington Post poll released Wednesday found twice as many voters thought the Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen was more qualified than Quayle. But two-thirds said Quayle should remain on the ticket.

The poll showed the presidential race a statistical dead heat — Dukakis had 48 percent to Bush's 47 percent, within the 3.5-point margin of error of the survey Aug. 24-30.

Bush stood on the Michigan shore of Lake Erie to deliver a speech aimed at separating himself from the Reagan administration and more activist positions on major environmental issues of acid rain, the "greenhouse" effect and pollution waters.

"Polluters should pay," the president said. "I am an environmentalist, always have been, from my earliest days growing up in then as a congressman... and I always will be."

Bush planned a trip to his rival's home ground on Thursday with a visit to Boston Harbor aimed at making the harbor's long-standing pollution problem an embarrassment to the Massachusetts governor.

Attempting a pre-emptive strike, Dukakis blasted the Reagan administration for cutting funding for the Clean Water Act, some of which could have been used for the harbor cleanup.

"We are doing it, no thanks to Bush or the administration," Dukakis said.
