Delta Flight 1141 crashes, covers field with wreckage

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Delta Flight 1141 slid to a halt in a field of waist-high prairie grass dotted with sunflowers near the end of a runway at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

The smell of jet fuel spilled from the 727 hung heavy in the air as a small army of rescue workers swarmed around the charred wreckage.

There was a din of hovering helicopters and the roar of fire engine pumps as water was sprayed inside the fuselage.

The field had been transformed into a grim parking lot with emergency vehicles. Earth movers had scraped roads around the scene, just short of the runway.

Along the airport's chain-link perimeter fence, yellow plastic ribbons were strung about, keeping the curious away from areas where officials were examining the wreckage and rescuers were removing bodies.

Telephone cabled snakes across the field as General Telephone of the Southwest set up emergency phones for the horde of reporters that gathered at the site.

Reporters from across Texas and the nation questioned airport spokesman Joe Dealey Jr., who told the same story over and over again. Survivors were hustled away quickly.

Two hours after the crash, the first corpse was covered near a gaping hole in the plane's side. There were other remains inside.

After the remains were sorted, they were taken by tractor trailer to the Tarrant County Medical Examiners Office in nearby Fort Worth.

Reporters and photographers were led from a command post to within 40 yards of the plane for a survey. The plane's charred fuselage was upright, a 25-foot hole in its rear section.

The wings were sheared off and lying useless on the ground.

The tail section was dangling by threads of greenish twisted metal. The Delta logo on the tail was unrecognizable.

Perhaps 60 yards from the fuselage was one of the plane's three engines. It was standing erect like a piece of abstract sculpture.

The exterior of the front section was relatively undamaged. The word "Delta" and the can flag from that section were visible.

What could be seen through the gaping of the interior was absolute destruction. There were burns on each side of the hole for 15 feet and the plane's windows in that section melted.

Nothing remained of the seats, it appeared where passengers sat. The plane's frame was that section was twisted and burned.

The ground near the plane was littered with bandage wrappers, syringes and other supplies.

From the passenger's baggage, a red shirt and jeans, along with a woman's blouse, were strewn in the grass.

Airplanes on the other side of the huge continued to take off and land. About a mile away, golfers played at an airport nearby.

The songs of the birds hovering in the mimicked the tragedy and loss marked the terrible explosion of the Delta aircraft.

GRAPEVINE (AP) — It must have been a miracle to escape from the inferno left after the huge plane exploded.

The burned-out hull of Delta 1141 rested in a grassy field dotted by sunflowers. The four-foot prairie grass smoldered long after rescuers put out the flames of the jetliner, which crashed on takeoff at the south end of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Wednesday.

Acrid smells of jet fuel and charred plastic lingered in the breeze at the field.

There were many more survivors, officials said, than fatalities, which seemed a miracle when looking at the charred remains of the aircraft.

They carried away the survivors quickly. At about 11 a.m. two hours after the crash, they covered the first corpse near a gaping hole in the plane's side. There were other remains inside.

After the remains were sorted, plans were to take them by tractor trailer to the Tarrant County Medical Examiners Office in nearby Fort Worth.

Reporters and photographers were led from a command post to within 40 yards of the plane for a survey. The plane's charred fuselage was upright, a gaping 25-hole in its rear section.

World briefs

Witnesses shocked as plane crashes

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A motorist driving along the interstate said he couldn't believe what he saw when he witnessed a Delta 727 crash with 105 people aboard.

"I was coming over the bridge on I-30 in Arlington, and I saw a big ball of fire going into the air," Greg Isaacs of Dallas told KRLLD radio. "I started driving over there and it looked like it was over near D-FW, and I thought, 'No way could it be an airplane accident.'

Eyewitnesses said the plane burst into flames and plowed the dirt of a north-south runway.

David Hooker, 28, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, said he was at a gas station south of the airport when the plane crashed.

"I heard the normal noise of an airplane taking off," he said, turned to watch and just saw the nose clear a building on there," he said pointing to a level warehouse type facility.

"Then there was a cloud of smoke about three stories high and an explosion," Hooker said.

Stock exchange remains sluggish

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market posted some scattered losses in another sluggish session Wednesday after an early advance failed to stand up.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 10 points soon after the opening, finished with a 6.58 loss at 2,031.65.

Analysts said hopes were increasing on Wall Street that Friday's report on the employment situation for August would show a moderation in job growth, which would presumably ease pressure for credit-tightening by the Federal Reserve.

Brokers said the market was still suffering from the apprehension and caution that has predominated in recent sessions.

Takeover rumors and speculation revved up several other issues, including Kerr-McGee, up at 39, and B.F. Goodrich, up at 54.

Scientific Atlanta said it knew of no explanation why shares climbed 1 3/4 to 12 1/2 in usually heavy activity.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 50 actively traded stocks, the market lost $3.92 billion, or 0.13 percent in value.

U.S. poverty level, family income rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — American family income rose by 1 percent last year but the number of people living in poverty also edged upward slightly, the Census Bureau reported Wednesday.

The economic recovery is leaving many poor Americans behind," Robert Greenstein of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, private research group, said.

He said the most disturbing figures dealt with black Americans, who suffered a significant increase in poverty. The government defined the poverty income level as $11,611 for a family of four in 1987, up from $11,203 the previous year.

William P. Butz, the Census Bureau's associate director for demographic programs, said the nation's economic performance in terms of income and poverty has been mixed as usual.

The number of Americans living in poverty last year totaled 32.5 million, slightly higher than the 32.4 million reported in 1986. The poverty rate was 13.6 percent, down from 13.6 percent.

Butz said neither change considered statistically significant because they are within the margin of possible error in the report, which was based on a sample of about 60,000 households across the country.

It is possible for the poverty rate to decline even when more people are poor because the size of the population is growing faster than the number of people living in poverty.

Researchers: Gene could cause cancer

BOSTON (AP) — A gene inherited by a third of all white Americans may be responsible for most cancer of the colon and rectum, and a search is on to pinpoint this inborn cancer trigger, researchers say.

The study, to be published today, suggests one gene — or perhaps several — that are present at birth put some people at high risk of developing adenomatous polyps. Colon and rectal cancers develop from these growths.

Researchers who conducted the work at the University of Utah say they believe the still-identified genetic factor accounts for 50 percent to 100 percent of all cancer of the colon and rectum, which strikes an estimated 147,000 Americans annually.

"This paper is of particular importance, because it points to the fact that a single gene may underlie a significant portion of all cases of colon cancer," Dr. Michael Swift of the University of North Carolina said. "It gives, in principle, a way of getting to that gene and identifying it."

Dr. Randall W. Burt, a co-author of the Utah study, said that locating the gene is one of his team's goals. "We think we have a fairly good chance of one day finding the gene or genes," he said.

Until now, many experts believed that inheritance played only a minor role in colon cancer.
