Police hope sketch can help identify victim

GALVESTON (AP) — Authorities are hoping an artist's rendering of a woman's face will help them identify a victim whose assailant placed a cloth on her face and shoulder and set the material ablaze.

Police said an 11-year-old boy discovered the nude body of a woman in a field behind a K mart store about 9:30 a.m. Monday. The woman's face had been burned beyond recognition.

Sgt. Leo Singleton said the police investigation has been severely handicapped with few clues to the woman's identity and no final report from medical examiners on what caused her death.

Houston police artist Lois Gibson spent several hours Tuesday afternoon examining the body and devised what police hope is an accurate depiction of the victim.

The woman is described as 5-foot-7, 180 pounds, white and probably in her mid-20s. She has hazel eyes and shoulder-length brown hair. She had a mole below her right nostril, a small scar on the right side of her lip and a long scar on her lower right abdomen.

Police believe the woman had been dead for less than 12 hours when the body was found. Authorities determined the woman's assailant had placed a cloth on her face and shoulder and set the cloth ablaze. But aside from the burns and some scratches, police said there were no other wounds on the body.

Singleton said the department has received more than 50 calls from people attempting to locate missing persons, but none have fit the description of the victim.

Judge orders convicted thief to pile manure

HOUSTON (AP) — The bad guy who disarmed the Lone Ranger will be spending a lot of time around horses, but he'll be cleaning up after the animals rather than riding them.

Edward Louis Young III, who was convicted of stealing pistols owned by Jack Carlson "Clayton" Moore, has been sentenced to spend 600 hours cleaning up after the horses at Houston's police stables.

The task could take years to complete if the 45-year-old Young spends 20 hours a month shoveling manure at the Houston Mounted Patrol's stables.

State District Judge Ted Poe, who sentenced the suburban Missouri resident on Tuesday, said the punishment was appropriate for the man who disarmed the hero who has been bringing evil outlaws to justice on television and in movies for a half-century.

Young, a former Continental Airlines baggage handler, was convicted of stealing Moore's chrome-plated, twin Colt .45-caliber revolvers at Houston Intercontinental Airport Dec. 24, 1986. The panel sentenced him to 10 years probation.

Moore was signing autographs at the airport while enroute to suburban Pasadena to appear at a show when his bags disappeared.

Young contended someone had sold him the pistols and holsters for $200 outside a Houston pawn shop Dec. 29, 1986. Even though he had been working at the airport when Moore's baggage and guns were stolen, he maintained his innocence.

Young had been free on an appeal bond, but an appeals court recently upheld the conviction, which brought on the sentencing.

Defense attorney Ealy Bennett said, "I had to tell him this morning what the judge was going to do to him. I told him, 'You're going to be shoveling ...' You should have seen his face."

The lawyer had based his appeal on insufficient evidence and the fact that Poe let the Lone Ranger wear his sunglasses and white hat while testifying.
