Court candidate plays game, holds election-based contest

DALLAS (AP) — A candidate for the state's highest criminal court is publicizing his campaign by sponsoring a contest that asks entrants questions about the race and promises a free trip to Sea World to the winner.

Judge Tom Rickhoff of San Antonio, who says his bid for the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has received little attention, placed a full-page ad in the September issue of "Texas Monthly" with pictures of himself, a penguin and a dolphin under the headline "A Real Political Contest."

The ad includes a contest entry form that invites Texans to answer four true-or-false questions about Rickhoff's race against incumbent Judge Charles Miller.

The winner, to be selected in a drawing Oct. 18, gets a four-day, three-night vacation in San Antonio, complete with passes to see Sea World of Texas, tickets to a San Antonio Spurs basketball game and a tour of the Alamo.

And there are prizes for the runners-up: 10 pounds of Tex-Mex frozen shrimp, three pairs of jogging shoes and an assortment of candy.

"It's innovative," said Rickhoff, who is currently a Republican state district judge in San Antonio.

"This is embarrassing," Miller, his Democratic opponent, told the Dallas Morning News.

Rickhoff said he decided to conduct the contest after finding that people not only didn't recognize his name, but also had never heard of the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin, the court of last resort for criminal cases in Texas.

"I'm trying to dramatize the fact that there is a citizen wall of apathy around the race," said Rickhoff, adding he's only received about two dozen responses.

He said most of the prizes have been donated to his campaign and denied there was anything inappropriate about the contest.

But Miller said the idea shows poor judgment.

"It creates a circus atmosphere in a race that ought to be dealt with seriously," he said.

Randy Erben, assistant secretary of state, said his office has studied Rickhoff's contest and concluded it does not violate state election law.
