Democrats say they will better state's economy

AUSTIN (AP) — The Massachusetts attorney general and the Boston mayor came to Texas on Monday to tout their state's economic "miracle" under Democratic Gov. Michael Dukakis. Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen also was in town preparing for his debate with Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle. Bentsen tossed a football at a session with photographers and received a University of Texas sweatshirt. "The mayor and I wanted to come here today to set the record straight," said Massachusetts Attorney General James Shannon at a news conference with Texas Democratic officials and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn. Shannon said they wanted to make it clear to people in the southwest the difference Gov.

Dukakis has made in Massachusetts, and that they believe that the same approach to leadership in the White House can make a difference for the southwest and all of the U.S. After the Capitol news conference, Flynn and Shannon were going to McAllen to meet with mayors of small towns, the Texas Dukakis campaign said. "While Texas has lost jobs, while Texas banks have been failing, the economy in Massachusetts has been excellent — it has been a miracle," Bob Armstrong, parks and wildlife commissioner and a former Texas land commissioner, said. The election of Dukakis would help turn around the economy of Texas more than any action the state could do, said Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin.

"If you're going to really deal with homelessness and hopelessness and hunger, you talk about getting jobs for people," Delco said. "In the Texas Legislature, we've tried to do that, and we're delighted to see that under the leadership of Governor Dukakis, Massachusetts has achieved what we're still striving to do." Massachusetts has gained 85,000 new businesses and 400,000 jobs under Dukakis, Flynn said. Various officials at the news conference — which also included Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos of Austin and Land Commissioner Garry Mauro — also praised Massachusetts' education system and 3.2 percent unemployment rate, which they said is the lowest of an industrialized state in the United States.

Students must remove cars from unpaved parking area

Students who enjoyed parking in the uncrowded temporary parking lot on Jersey Street this weekend soon will find out why the lot was so empty: it hasn't been opened officially yet. Keith Chapman, manager of construction, said the lot still needs to be paved. The University Police Department began relocating cars parked in the lot at 7 a.m. today so the contractors can get back to work. Shelly Wilson, a student worker at the University Police Department, said the cars will most likely be moved to the temporary lot behind the police station, at the former site of married student housing. "We want to make sure people know their cars haven't been picked up by a wrecker service," Wilson said. "The cars are not being ticketed." Wilson said the residence hall advisors have been notified and announcements were made around campus Monday at the dining halls. A guard will be in the lot to tell people about the move, and the entrance to the lot has been blocked, she said. The lot will be open as soon as the paving is complete. Until then, off-campus day students can use one of 150 spaces in Parking Annex 51 that have been removed from faculty permit-only status. The lot, located near Zachry Engineering Center east of Bizzell Street, now will be open to those with blue day student permits as well as yellow staff parking stickers. Tom Williams, director of Parking Transit and Traffic, said the relocation of spaces was necessary because of overcrowding in adjacent lots. "The students were having to fight with staff for the limited number of spaces in that area, while there are empty staff spaces nearby," Williams said. The spaces for students are in the easternmost portion of the back half of the lot, he said. "We decided that the extra spaces in this lot would be most convenient for off-campus day student parking," he said. "The faculty weren't filling up all the spaces, and it's not really that convenient to any of the dorms." "We realize the parking situation is bad, but we're doing everything we can to make space available for everyone," he said.

"We realize the parking situation is bad, but we're doing everything we can to make space available for everyone."
