Sessions to explain Open Records Act

By Alan Sembera
Senior Staff Writer
Texas A&M students, faculty and administrators can learn more about the public's right to gain access to government records and meetings at a symposium to be presented Saturday in 201 MSC.
Attorneys from the State Bar of Texas will present the seminars to educate government officials and the public about the Texas Open Meetings Act and the Texas Open Records Act.
The acts, passed in 1973 and 1974, are designed to prohibit governmental bodies from closing meetings to the public and to guarantee public access to most government records.
The sessions, which will begin at 8:45 a.m., will review the information covered by the laws, how the courts are interpreting the laws, and what power journalists and the public have to enforce the laws.
The symposium also will feature a panel of local government officials and media professionals who will discuss hypothetical cases involving violations and circumventions of the Texas Freedom of Information laws.
The panel will consist of James Bond, deputy chancellor for legal and external affairs for A&M; Robert Borden, assistant city editor for the Bryan-College Station Eagle; James Braun, news director for KBTX-TV of Bryan; and Dick Holmgren, county judge.

The panel discussion will begin at 11 a.m. and will be followed by a luncheon at 12:30 p.m.
Howard Swindle, assistant managing editor of the Dallas Morning News, will be the featured speaker at the luncheon.
Swindle edited and directed the paper's 1986 Pulitzer Prize winning project on segregation and unequal treatment in federally subsidized housing.
He also is on the board of directors of the Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas, which is co-sponsoring the symposium with the Texas State Bar.
Nancy Monson, executive director of the foundation, said the symposium is the fourth in a series of six being held around the state to educate journalists, government officials and the public about their right to gain access to public information.
Educating and informing the public is the foundation's major purpose, she said.
"They have a right to know what their government's doing," she said. "Over the years, many government officials have found it easier not to tell the public what's going on. That's undemocratic."
The symposium is open to the public. The morning seminars are free, but the luncheon costs $15.
Anyone interested in attending should make reservations with the Freedom of Information Foundation by calling (214) 977-6651.

'For Crying Out Loud' will perform at benefit

Texas A&M's Students Against Apartheid will sponsor a benefit concert at Eastgate Live Friday night to raise funds for needy families in South Africa.
For Crying Out Loud, a local band which plays rock and roll with a slightly satirical edge, is scheduled to perform between 9 and 10 p.m. Cover charge for the concert will be $3.
SAA president Jeff Dyess said the organization will use all proceeds from the concert to help needy families in South Africa through a contribution to the Africa Fund, an American organization that helps families in South Africa with donations of food, shelter and clothing.
Dyess said the benefit is different from any of SAA's other activities because it actually will help people in South Africa, rather than just making a statement of protest.
"This is something we haven't really done in the past, but it's something that we can really do to help all the people that are suffering in South Africa," Dyess said. "What we've done in the past has gotten us a lot of publicity and attention, but now we're actually doing something that is actually helping."
The most familiar of SAA's actions is the shanty the group has built in front of the Academic Building several times during the last two semesters.
Organization members say the main purpose of the shanties is to make people aware of the plight of South African blacks.

Texan donates money to hurricane victims

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas philanthropist William Barrett is contributing $100,000 and hopes to raise as much as a half-million dollars more to provide shelter for thousands of Mexicans left homeless last month by Hurricane Gilbert.
"Texas prepared for the storm that could have wiped out thousands of homes and businesses along our own coast and even beyond. We got lucky," Barrett said.
"Mexico did not," he said.
Barrett, who kicked off the Good Neighbor Fund at a news conference Wednesday, said that during a weekend visit to Mexico, church and government officials told him about 500,000 Mexicans need housing in the states of Campeche, Nuevo Leon, Quintana Roo and Yucatan.
Barrett, who hopes to raise $250,000 to $500,000 in the next two months, said Catholic Charities of Dallas will collect funds locally and turn them over to Caritas, a Mexican charity supervising repair and construction of new homes.

Talk to focus on international students
The law firm of Samuel M. Tidwell & Associates will sponsor a seminar on "International Students," at 7 p.m. on Oct. 7 in 402 Rudder Tower.
The discussion will focus on immigration changes and regulations, asylum and naturalization. The seminar is free and open to international students and the general public.

Western Arts Trio will perform Monday
The Western Arts Trio, a world-renowned chamber music ensemble, will perform Monday at 8 p.m. in Rudder Theater as part of the University Chamber Series.
The trio consists of violinist Brian Hanly, cellist David Tomatz and pianist Werner Rose, Texas A&M's coordinator of music in the Department of Philosophy and Humanities.
The ensemble will perform three piano trios by contemporary composer Robert Muczynski and "Ducky" by Antonin Dvorak.
Formed in 1973 when all were faculty members at the University of Wyoming, the trio has toured Europe, Australia, South America and Mexico. They have recorded six albums and plan to record "The Piano Trios of Robert Muczynski" which will be released in late 1989.
Tickets are $4 for students and $6 for non-students and are available at the Rudder Box Office.

NOVACON IV events start Saturday
MSC NOVA will be sponsoring NOVACON IV, a mini wargame convention, this Saturday and Sunday. Registration is 8 a.m. in 203 MSC Saturday and events will begin 9 a.m. Registration cost is $4 for both days.
Open gaming will be held in the MSC ballroom and tournaments will be conducted in adjacent rooms. Tournaments will include Advanced Dungeons & Dragons, Star Fleet Battles, Champions, Axis & Allies, Squad Leader and Car Wars. A Dealers' Room will be provided for those interested in purchasing games, comics, miniatures and t-shirts.
NOVACON IV will also have video showings featuring a Vietnam theme all day Saturday and part of Sunday including "Apocalypse Now," "Platoon," "Full Metal Jacket," and "Hamburger Hill" as well as others.
Students seeking more information should call the Student Programs Office and ask for NOVA at (409) 845-1515.

Council offers research opportunities
The National Research Council is offering 1989 Resident, Cooperative, and Postdoctoral Research Associateship Programs to Ph.D. scientists and engineers. The programs offer research opportunities in laboratories throughout the United States.
The programs are open to both recent Ph.D. degree recipients and senior investigators.
About 450 full-time associateships will be awarded for research in chemistry, earth sciences, engineering, applied sciences, biology, behavioral sciences, biotechnology, mathematics, planetary sciences and physics.

Symposium will examine Texas history
By D'Ann Marie Aviles
Reporter
With the turn of the century not far away, Texas is concerned with what the future holds for the state.
At Texas A&M, the History Department is analyzing the history of Texas to prepare for its future.
The Texas Committee for the Humanities and the History Department are funding and sponsoring a symposium and round table discussion on "Interpreting Texas History," Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. in 510 Rudder Tower.
Speakers from across the state will lecture on Texas history from the Spanish occupation period to the present.
By looking at and critiquing past writings, historians are trying to decide what action to take to ensure a better future for Texas.
Three A&M history professors will participate in the symposium.
History Department Head Larry D. Hill will discuss the effects of progressive reform.
Associate Professor Walter L. Buenger will discuss economic development in Texas since 1845, and Associate Professor Robert A. Calvert will discuss changes in Texas agriculture.
The program will be divided into three sessions.
The first session, led by Buenger, will cover the legacy of Spanish Texas, the continued impact of the revolution and the republic, statehood, the Civil War and reconstruction and economic development.
Hill will lead the second session, and after his discussion of reform, other lecturers will speak about Texas politics and Texas cities since 1845 and 20th century cultural life in Texas.
In the final session, Calvert will discuss Hispanics, women and blacks in Texas and agricultural changes in the state.
Calvert said that Texas' economy is becoming a service economy and the population is changing a well.
In order to be prepared for the future and to gain a vital perspective on how to proceed into the 21st century, Texans must recognize and address the changes occurring in the state, he said.
By studying the past, he said, Texas can prepare for the future.
"Too many historians have tried to address the history of Texas from an Anglo-Saxon, male point of view," Calvert said. "But we are now seeing only to California in Hispanic population, and the state population is 51 percent women."
The symposium is free and open to the public.
