"Champion wants a very safe work environment," company spokesman Bob Bowman said. "We don't condone those types of activities on our prem-

Many of the fired employees had worked for the company for a decade or more. One was the company's employee of the month.

'Now everybody is scared to talk to their best friend in this place," said one employee who asked not to be identified. 'You never know when somebody is spying on you for the company.

Undercover agents posing as newly hired workers were placed in several departments in the plant and instructed to win employees' confidence to discover the source of illegal drugs

Texas Department of Public Safety officers were brought in, and agents made numerous drug purchases with money provided by the DPS, officials said.

Howard Keith Underwood, 33, an employee in the plant's wood yard, was arrested Sept. 26 and charged with selling almost a pound of cocaine to undercover agents. Several other employees were videotaped stealing company equipment, investigators said, but charges have not yet been filed.

Sue Brackin, president of the union local, said many union members feel the sting was necessary to stamp out drug use at the plant but that others believe the operation violated their rights.

'We do feel there was a great deal of entrapment," Brackin said. "We are also looking at whether the company violated its own policies in the firings."

Bruce Griffiths, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union in Houston, said the company's tactics probably were perfectly legal and the fired employees may have no recourse.

Officials file lawsuit to get rid of prisoners

AUSTIN (AP) — Nueces County officials Thursday filed a lawsuit asking that the state be ordered to remove inmates who have been sentenced to the Texas Department of Corrections but are being held in the county jail. "We want every single state prisoner removed from our jail. We don't want to pay for them any more. We've been paying for them for too long already,

Nueces County Attorney Carlos Valdez. Officials said they think Nueces County is the first to file such a state court suit, although court action has been contemplated by others. Travis County, defendant in a federal jail suit, has asked that the state be brought into that suit.

TDC, under a federal court order because of crowded conditions, limits the number of admissions with a quota system for counties.

The suit — which names as defendants the Texas Board of Corrections and TDC Director James Lynaugh says the state has a duty to take its pris-there are now about 167. 'We have people (inmates) on the floor. We're paying another county to take them. We're building millions of dollars' worth of jails, and we want the state to take their prisoners," Barnes said. He said Nueces County is under a federal court order itself to meet state jail

It costs $40 a day to house state prisoners, money that comes from local property taxes, Barnes said. Nueces County Jail capacity is 387, but the county has 513 prisoners, including 48 being housed in a Frio County facility,

Jay Rosser, deputy press secretary for Gov. Bill Clements, said Clements, working with legislative leaders, "has initiated the most aggressive prison expansion program in Texas history

By fiscal year 1990, 13,356 prison beds approved as part of the expansion program will be in place, representing about a one-third expansion of the prison system, Rosser said. Clements will seek funding for another 10,000 prison beds in the 1989 session, he said.
