'Eight Men Out' proves one of year's best movies

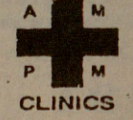

By Shane Hall
 Staff Writer
 In 1919, the Cincinnati Reds beat the Chicago White Sox five games to three in the World Series. Shortly after the Series ended, eight White Sox players were accused of rigging the outcome of the Series in exchange for money from gamblers. The players were barred from professional baseball.
 This incident became known as the "Black Sox scandal."
 Director John Sayles dramatizes the scandal in his latest film, "Eight Men Out."
 The movie, one of the year's best, examines the story behind the incident and studies the players' motives in throwing the Series.
 The film seems to conclude that money and revenge were the reasons.

The film's ending, which shows Jackson and Weaver six years later, is especially disturbing. Jackson is a bush league player and Weaver is in the stands watching his former teammate play. He overhears two fans refer to him, Jackson, and the other barred players as "bums."
 Director Sayles appears in front of the camera as well as behind it. In the film he plays sportswriter Ring Lardner.
 The baseball action is brilliantly filmed and the costuming is exceptional. "Eight Men Out," in short, is a baseball classic.

Response high for local study of contraceptive

By Laurie Tomasini
 Reporter
 Response to the ad for an oral contraceptive study has been good, Dr. Claude Goswick said.
 Goswick, medical director for G&S Studies Inc., said that so many women have responded to the ad in The Battalion that the research study group is screening calls to quickly eliminate any women who are not qualified for the study.
 "Some women call to find out the nature of the study and decide not to participate," Goswick said. "That is their prerogative."
 "The qualifications are not strict," he said. "The women should be 18 or older and have a need to use the contraceptive. They must also have a normal menstrual cycle."
 Goswick said that women who already take birth control pills must stop taking them before the beginning of the study.
 "We prefer women who have not previously used birth control pills, however, if they have they must have been off the pill for two months before they are allowed to do the study," he said.
 G&S needs at least 157 women for the study, Goswick said.
 He said G&S is conducting a double-blind study in which Estrostep (the medication being tested) and Loestrin (a pill already on the market) are compared.
 "It is a scientifically controlled study," Goswick said. "Neither the doctor nor the patient knows which pill is taken until the end of the study. This ensures the test results will be honest and unbiased."
 The testing will take place over a six-month period.
 The women participating in the study will receive a six-month supply of either

Estrostep or Loestrin during the study and an additional six-month supply of Loestrin and $120 if they complete the study. Also included are complete physical, blood work, pelvic examination, pregnancy test, urine analysis and smear.
 "Our primary concern is studying tolerance the women have for the contraceptive."
 Dr. Claude Goswick
 Medical Director
 G&S Studies Inc.
 Goswick said. "This medication is a brand new approach but an excellent what has been used before."
 "Estrostep is a low-dose formulation where the estrogen is released in a by-step fashion," he said. "That's a main difference between Estrostep and Loestrin, because Loestrin causes a continual release of estrogen."
 Estrostep is made by Parke-Davis pharmaceutical company in New Jersey. "Parke-Davis will take responsibility for any complications as long as it was taken properly," Goswick said. "However, we do not anticipate problems arising."
 At the end of the study, each woman will be asked to evaluate the medication she took.
