Nominees still plan to battle for Texas votes

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis hasn't written off Texas and continues campaigning vigorously for the state, his Texas staff said Monday.

"Mike Dukakis was in the state on Saturday, Lloyd Bentsen is in the state today (Monday) and Bentsen will be back at the end of the week. We are not pulling out," Missy Mandell, spokesman for the Democratic campaign in Texas, said.

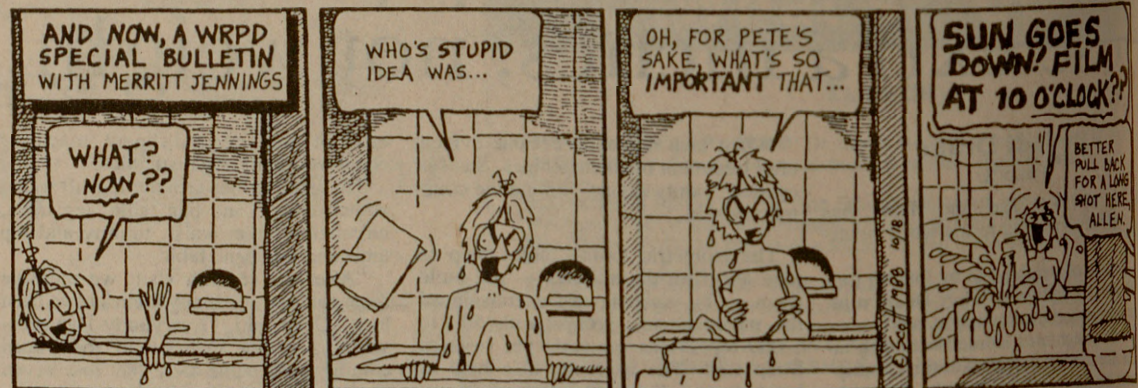

Republican campaigners, meanwhile, said Vice President George Bush will continue to emphasize his adopted home state in the campaign's final three weeks.

"Texas is an absolute No. 1 priority for the Bush campaign and there is no scenario for a national Bush victory without us winning Texas," Reggie Bashur, deputy campaign manager for Bush in the state, said.

Their comments came after newspaper reports that the Dukakis campaign in Texas was being downgraded.

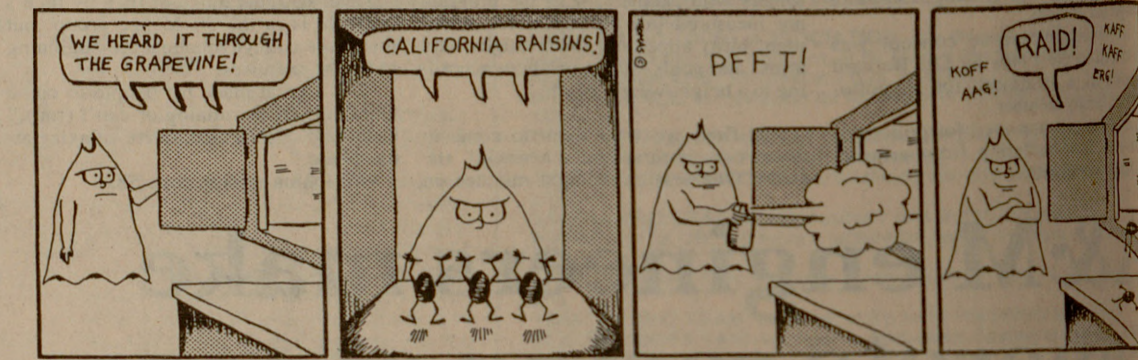

A Washington Post story on Sunday said Dukakis would concentrate his efforts on 18 states and the District of Columbia, with 272 electoral votes, two more than needed to win.

MSC Council discusses A&M issues

By Melinda Eddleman Reporter

A new computer system is being considered to replace the existing system in the MSC, the MSC Council decided in a meeting Monday.

James Reynolds, director of the MSC, said if the present computer systems go down, they remain down longer because two of the four components serving as part of the main frame are obsolete.

Because parts cannot be purchased for the components, if the system went down, it would take 10-12 weeks for the MSC to regain computer capabilities.

Several other issues were discussed in the meeting. Reynolds said President Mobley has provided divisions of the University the opportunity to meet with him for three hours per division to inform him of their activities. Dr. John Koldus, vice-president of student services, will use one hour of the time allotted student services to share specific information with Mobley.

Twelve minutes will then be allotted for each of the student service divisions to make a direct presentation to the president, he said.

The council executive officers will meet this week to discuss how the MSC might make its presentation to Mobley.

The Council also approved the MBA/Law Symposium titled, "Destined for Success," which is scheduled for Nov. 9 and 12. The symposium will host school representatives from most of the Southwest Conference schools, as well as some Ivy League schools including Harvard, Notre Dame and Cornell on Nov. 9.

The symposium will emphasize graduate programs in business and law and will have more than 18 speakers give presentations Nov. 12.

Registration will be from Oct. 31 to Nov. 11, and will have a pre-registration cost of $5, or $8 at the door. The symposium is targeted at those students interested in earning law or business degrees.

The council approved the Association of College Unions International regional conference next October, which will consist of schools from Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas.

Reynolds said there are about 60 member schools in the three states that comprise the ACUI in Region 12. Between 30 and 50 educational sessions would be produced over a three-day period. About 250 students and faculty would attend the conference from member schools.

The Program Review Committee recommendation to increase the price of All Night Fair tickets from 10 to 20 cents also was approved.

Barry Hoggard, executive vice president for programs, said the All Night Fair has not broken even the last two years. He said this year the price of the tickets will be higher, and there will not be an admission fee.

The council also approved the following:

- Town Hall Coffee House held a Rumors Snack Bar Oct. 28, which will include a guitarist and a one-act play.
- Political Forum's Election Awareness Day/Mock Election for Nov. 2.
- Political Forum's program Oct. 28 at 7 p.m. in 701 Rudder with Ben Boulter, who is running against Lloyd Bentsen for the state Senate.

ACLU files suit for dying inmates

HOUSTON (AP) — A class-action lawsuit pending in federal court here accuses the state prison system of instituting a policy that denies inmates with AIDS and other deadly diseases access to pre-parole programs.

The suit was filed by the Houston chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of an unnamed inmate infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

It claims that the Texas Department of Corrections discriminates against inmates with deadly diseases by denying them access to pre-parole halfway-house programs run by state officials.

Such access, said ACLU attorney Bruce Griffiths, may mean an additional six months of freedom at a critical time in an inmate's life.

"Six months is clearly a long time," Griffiths said. "Especially when he's got a shorter life expectancy."

T.J. Daughtery, director of the TDC Pre-Parole program, said the policy is not designed to discriminate against AIDS victims but was instituted solely as a matter of controlling medical costs.

If inmates are on medication or under a physician's supervision, he said, they are not put into the program.

"If we have to provide medical care, we are going to do it where it's the cheapest," he said, adding that place is in prison.

According to documents filed in the pending case, the inmate consented to a blood test to determine if he was HIV positive in April when he was in a prison hospital for a sinus condition.

A month later, he was transferred to Huntsville for orientation in the pre-parole program and then assigned to a halfway house in Houston. But less than two weeks later, he was told to return to TDC and there was told he had tested positive for exposure to HIV.

Griffiths claims his client was told by prison medical authorities that he was returned to prison because the halfway houses are not equipped to care for someone with a "chronic disease." But he said his client has not contracted AIDS and is suffering none of the symptoms.

By removing his client from the halfway house, Griffiths said, TDC deprived him of a great deal of freedom afforded halfway house residents.

But Griffiths said the lawsuit's most important goal is to stop the state from allegedly discriminating against certain inmates and putting them past the date they should be released.
