THEM looks at Soviet life

By Shane Hall

Winston Churchill described the Soviet Union as "a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma." In this age of glasnost and perestroika, however, Americans today seem more curious about the Soviet nation and its people. Most of our information about the Soviet Union has come from the evening news and the classroom.

However, a new magazine offers a look further behind the Iron Curtain. The magazine is called THEM. Published by a group of Soviet emigres, THEM takes a deeper approach at examining the country and should serve as a good source of information for people curious about all things Soviet.

As the publisher Si Frumkin stated in the first issue's written introduction, "we are a race of Peeping Toms. We love to look behind the scenes, to uncover what is hidden, to be privy to secrets."

If the first issue is any indication, THEM will be a fascinating magazine. The articles are written by Soviet emigres living in the United States and Europe.

Vadim Belotserkovsky, a political scientist who left the Soviet Union in the late 1970s, has an article about the Pamyat organization, a semi-legal neo-Nazi group. Their credo, he writes, is that the Russian nation is the greatest and that the Judeo-Masons are the enemies of not only Russia, but also the civilized world.

A sidebar to the story tells of youth groups in the Soviet Union that are not recognized by the government, but that have emerged nevertheless in the wake of social reforms by Mikhail Gorbachev.

According to the article, there are organizations for motorcyclists (called Rokery) and even groups of heavy metal rock fans (called Metallisty).

Other features in the magazine include a story on the Soviet government's attempts to crack down on prostitution in the country, a story by a Russian soldier in Afghanistan, telling of his experiences there, and an account of the clashes between Christian Armenians and Muslim Azerbaijanis.

A feature of a lighter nature lets the reader in on some jokes in the Soviet Union that if told to the wrong person could buy the teller an extended vacation in Siberia.

Sample jokes include: "What's the difference between capitalism and communism?" The answer: "Under capitalism, man exploits man. Under communism it's the other way around."

One might ask if THEM is pro- or anti-Soviet. It is not necessarily either. However, the contents of the first issue demonstrate the magazine's clear disapproval of the Soviet system.
