THE CLASS OF '52 COULDN'T SEE INTO THE FUTURE

Folks here are still talking about "The 1952 Incident." For some reason still unknown, a certain graduating class at a certain university missed what was certainly the opportunity of a lifetime. The chance to meet with a recruiter from the National Security Agency. Maybe they were busy that day. Maybe something else caught their eye. But the fact remains, a meeting with NSA could have meant a future full of challenging, exciting projects. Now you've got the same chance. Our recruiter will be visiting campus soon in search of talented mathematicians, computer scientists, electrical engineers and linguists. We're looking for people who want to work on important hands-on assignments, right from the start. NSA is the agency responsible for producing foreign intelligence information, safeguarding our government's communications and securing computer systems for the Department of Defense. And we're equally committed to helping you make your future strong. So do yourself a favor and meet with us. You don't need 3-D glasses to see that it's a great opportunity.

NSA will be on campus November 30 interviewing seniors majoring in Electrical Engineering, Computer Science and Math.

Sports Ags blow Tech away for 5th straight win

By Jerry Bolz Sports Writer

Bucky Richardson dives over the goal line for one of his three touchdowns Saturday. Texas A&M beat Louisiana Tech 56-17.

The Texas A&M Aggies overcame high winds and a fiery Louisiana Tech team to win their fifth in a row by downing the Bulldogs 56-17. Despite steady winds of almost 20 mph, the Aggie attack went airborne for the most productive passing game of quarterback Bucky Richardson's career at A&M.

Richardson, who hit on 9 of 13 attempts for 126 yards with one interception, said he felt the wind held the offense back. "I was just glad to get a few completions today," he said. "Without the wind, it wouldn't have been as close in the first half."

Richardson said the passing game would be necessary to beat Arkansas. The Aggies travel to Fayetteville to face the 9-0 Razorbacks Saturday in a showdown for the unofficial Southwest Conference championship.

Richardson said, "Arkansas feels like they're the best team, and we're going to try to prove them wrong. It's definitely the biggest game of our season." A&M Head Coach Jackie Sherrill said, "Right now, we can devote full concentration to Arkansas. They're 9-0 and they have a lot of momentum going into this game. Our players will respond to this challenge well."

In the first half, the Tech offense took advantage of the wind to jump out to a 12-8 lead after the first quarter, and only trailed 18-14 at the half.

Linebacker Dana Batiste said, "We weren't upset about the first half. We're used to taking off slow and finishing up strong. We could have played better but we were doing fine."

Running back Darren Lewis, who topped the 1,000-yard rushing mark for the season, said the Aggies underestimated Tech in the first half.

Bulldog Head Coach Joe Raymond Peace decided to kick off to start the second half and chose to take the wind in the fourth quarter. He said he hoped to keep the Aggies to a low score in the third quarter and mount a comeback in the fourth.

The decision proved devastating. The Aggies scored on all third-quarter possessions to blow the game open. Then they scored every possession in the fourth — against the wind.

After returning the second half kickoff to their 34-yard line, 11-yard runs by Lewis and reserve tailback Larry Horton, and an 18-yard completion from Richardson to split end Rod Harris put the Ags on the Tech 16.

From there it just took Richardson one shot to weave through defenders and score to keep A&M in front 25-14.

Tech got the ball back and quarterback Gene Johnson's pass to Bobby Slaughter was picked off by A&M defensive back William Thomas. Thomas fumbled the ball on the return but teammate Alex Morris fell on the ball.

Three plays later, Horton ran along the 5-yard line until he found an opening and pounced in for the score to put the Aggies up 32-14.

Tech, who had only 12 first downs on the day against 25 for the Aggies, was stalled again on their next possession and punted. A&M took only six plays to travel the 42 yards into Tech's end zone, with Richardson scampering the final 15 yards on an option keeper to the right side to make it 39-14.

Richardson hit Harris on consecutive passes of 11 and 23 yards on the next drive. The second was a spectacular over-the-shoulder reception in heavy coverage. Harris had five catches for 91 yards on the day.

"They were playing a lot of man-on-man coverage, and I love man-on-man," he said. "I can do my thing."

After going to Harris, the Aggies went back to their mainstay of Lewis on the ground.

His 160 yards on the day gave him 1,055 for the year, making Lewis the fourth Aggie ever to rush over 1,000 yards in a season.

"It's no big thrill," he said. "It's just one of the things you go through as a football player."

To finish off the drive, kicker Scott Slater booted a 54 yard field goal, the longest of his career, to extend the A&M lead to 42-14.

"This season, I've only had about a kick per game, so any kick helps me with the overall feeling of the game," he said. "It did me good inside."

Tech finally sustained a drive on their next possession, moving the ball to their own 20-yard line to the Aggies. From their, kicker Matt Stover connected on a 49-yard field goal to make it 42-17.

The Aggie defense held Tech minus-7 yards on the ground and rushing first down.

The Bulldogs could only manage 14 total yards on the day.

Linebacker John Roper, who tackled on the day, said that stopping run forced Tech to put the ball in the air and gave the Aggies a chance to pressure the quarterback.

Chris Osgood entered the game and orchestrated a 15-play drive that culminated with a 3-yard TD pass to Campbell Patterson — the first of Patterson's 10 TD passes in his college career.

The pass was one of only two on a drive consisting largely of oxygen while Osgood kept the ball five times.

Tech's next drive ended quickly with a tipped-ball interception by reserve defensive back Chris Crooms and resealed the Bulldogs' lead.

Robert Wilson and Keith McPherson pushed the ball close, and McPherson punched it in over the right side to put the Aggies up by 45.

Dearly beloved fans, we are gathered here together...

The worm has turned. It's come full circle. What goes around comes around. All the cliches apply. All the doubts are gone.

The Southwest Conference has only three decent teams, and the University of Texas ain't one of them. We all saw it coming. The Fred Akers years, when buckets and buckets of Texas talent were wasted with subpar coaching that led to unacceptable results, have been followed by the McWilliams years, which seem to be characterized by the same things. Except for the buckets and buckets of talent.

We all knew the Houston Cougars had all the tools necessary to manhandle the Longhorns. But I don't think anyone really thought it would be quite as bad as it was.

For those of you who were busy watching the local mismatch, let me enlighten you:

Cougar passes covered the skies. Cougar TDs covered the box score. David McWilliams covered his eyes. Mostly because the UT secondary didn't cover the UH receivers.

Houston shattered the UT record for yards passing surrendered in a game — the record that had been broken twice already this season. The 619 total yardage output broke the record of 516 set by Brigham Young — again, this season.

The total of 66 points was the worst in Texas home history. Second worst in 91 years of UT football.

It's tough to pick a single "worst." Seven Cougar TD passes. Chuck Waterspoon's 218 yards rushing on 11 carries. Matt Murdock, the latest in a string of quarterbacks "savours," going 15-for-39 with four interceptions.

Eric Metcalf even fumbled a punt. But that wasn't all of it — not by a long shot. The basic fact of the matter is, the Texas Longhorns were not really too good. They're not too good at all.

Actually it's kind of sad. The team that was a perennial national-championship contender has sunk to the second division of its own conference — the conference it once owned lock, stock and Cotton Bowl.

The Horns were reeling from two losses in their last two games. But a win over Texas Christian sandwiched between losses to Houston and Baylor gave UT some hope.

The Aggies took care of that — by the score of 37-17. Deflated Horns made the mistake of continuing the season and had fallen apart so completely and got blown out by Iowa in the Freedom Bowl.

The year that saw UT reach the No. 1 ranking and then fall in the Top 10 as late as the 10th week of the 13-week season ended with a 7-4-1 record and a bitter aftertaste.

But the Horns rebounded the next year. They rebounded from lackluster performances against Missouri and Stanford to play Oklahoma tight, losing only 14-7. A blowout loss to SMU was the only really bad game they played in conference. And they entered College Station with a very real Cotton Bowl hope.

It stayed alive until halftime. Then the Aggies turned on afterburners and blew to a 42-10 win and the subsequent thrashing of Auburn that New Year's Day.

UT hasn't won a big game since. The alumni that hated Akers so much were hoping that the theft of McWilliams would alter their beloved team's destiny. It hasn't.

Last year's 7-5 record is looking pretty good now for a school that once would be satisfied only with a national title. They stand at 3-5 now and have underrated TCU next on their schedule to play Baylor in Waco, where they haven't won since 1982 — only once since 1972.

And, of course, they have the Aggies. Last year's season was the first losing season since 1959 even before Darrell Royal. This one seems fated to be worse. Next doesn't look any better. How the mighty have fallen.
