I'm tired of seeing the Cowboys lose; Leave Sweeney in the game next week

The Dallas Cowboys needed a savior, and they may have found him in the form of Kevin Sweeney. Oh yeah, the Cowboys dropped their sixth straight game, but that isn't really any news. The news is that there was finally a spark of life in the team, particularly in the offense. The Dallas signal callers, an anchor of any team, have been weak at best this fall. Sunday afternoon is a time when average college students must bear up to the reality that, after a lazy weekend, they have 40 hours of studying to accomplish in 10 hours or rationalize the need to watch pro football.

Cray Pixley
Assistant Sports Editor

If you're like me, the football and television have a strong pull. The problem this Sunday was that my favorite team, the Cowboys, were playing the Giants. Watching the Cowboys' games this season has been torture at best. They lose, lose, and lose some more. I pondered on whether that political science book should be opened or whether I should subject myself to the frustration of watching Steve Pelluer bumble his way through the Meadowlands. Of course I chose the football game. I usually have given Dallas a fighting chance of grabbing my attention this season before turning off the television. After all, it's difficult to admit and accept that the Cowboys are not a sterling team anymore. It's distressing to want to cover your eyes everytime the ball is snapped. But still we watch. Pelluer did fumble-bumble his way through the first half with me wincing and cringing as he went. Pelluer just doesn't have what it takes—he has proved that if nothing else. I must admit that I haven't been able to watch a complete Cowboy game the entire year because of the poor play. I've always had to escape the trauma at some point or return only for the last painful minutes. After falling 26-0 against the Giants in the first half, I don't know why I kept watching Sunday. Cowboy fans are getting more apathetic about their team each week. But still we watch. Maybe it was the shots of Sweeney on the sidelines and the speculation of Terry Bradshaw and Verne Lundquist that Pelluer would be pulled. Pelluer pulled? Please oh please, I prayed. I was hoping to get a chance to see what that scab quarterback could do in a real season of pro football. There must be some hope beyond Pelluer. Sweeney had shined during the strike, but what could he do today? A whole lot. Sweeney set the second half on fire, and the Giants were't quite sure what to do. Some of the players admitted that they expected the Cowboys to drop down and die a quiet death in the final periods. Die is not in Sweeney's vocabulary. He kept striking and scrambling until there was any time left to scramble. Three touchdowns in the second half were cemented with Sweeney passes. Pelluer's miscues had set up two of the Giants' drives. Pelluer is definitely not what Tom Landry wanted. Pelluer even had the gall to say in a post-game interview that he felt he could come out in the second half and win. In the words of a Valley Girl: "I'm so sure!" Pelluer couldn't have found the endzone for anything. He could barely keep his hands on the ball. Sweeney seems to have that presence of mind. Dallas has been missing for three years or more, but Pelluer has caught my attention and definitely has given me hope for the Cowboys' future. The announcers, Bradshaw and Lundquist, added plus to Sweeney's season debut as they raved up my feelings about Sweeney's appearance. Bradshaw said, "Does Sweeney have the arm for pro ball? Yes. Does he have the heart? Yes. Does he have the uh... give me a word 'Vern'?" Yes, Terry, I agree with you. Finally a Dallas has found a quarterback with spirit and determination. I'm so tired of the scab efforts of Danny White and Pelleur. This season without but Sweeney is a strong pillar to rebuild. Sweeney has arrived, and I can only hope Landry give him the reins. Come next week, I hope the Minnesota Vikings a strong dose of Sweeney—the Cowboys' last

Sweeney has to wait to see if he will start

IRVING (AP)—Kevin Sweeney, the hero of a near NFL miracle in the Meadowlands, will have to wait until at least Tuesday to learn whether he is the new starting quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys.

Sweeney threw three touchdown passes in the second half against the New York Giants on Sunday but Dallas fell short 29-21 for the Cowboys' sixth consecutive loss. The Cowboys haven't lost six games in a row since their expansion year of 1960. Dallas coach Tom Landry said he didn't want to speculate yet whether Steve Pelluer would retain his starting job for Sunday night's game against the Minnesota Vikings. "I don't know what will happen right now," said Landry, who usually announces all lineup changes at his weekly Tuesday press luncheon. "We were a different team with Sweeney out there. Sweeney fueled the fire."

Sweeney was the hero of the NFL strike replacement games for Dallas last year, winning both games he started. However, he had never played in a regular game until Sunday. "I know who everybody wants to be the starter," Landry said. "He (Sweeney) was about the only exciting part of what happened against the Giants." Sweeney started the third period with Dallas trailing 26-0. Sweeney hit 19 of 37 passes for 189 yards. Landry is in a quandary not to destroy Pelluer's confidence. Only last week he predicted that Pelluer "will blossom out" and become an efficient quarterback. Even Pelluer admitted what Sweeney did "was exciting and awesome." "I made some poor decisions in the first half but I felt I could come back in the second half," Pelluer said. "It was coach Landry's decision, and I'll respect it."

Sweeney wasn't pushing Landry to start him. "I feel like I deserve to play, but I will have patience," Sweeney said. "I've learned a lot in the last two years on the sidelines. If I sit down, I'll just wait my turn." "I'm sure the Giants didn't know what to expect. I didn't know." Sweeney took the Cowboys on touchdown drives of 70, 59, and 80 yards. Two of his touchdown passes came on fourth down. "He just wouldn't accept a defeat," Landry said. "If we don't have a defensive back fall down on a long pass play and the Giants get a field goal then we are driving for the winning touchdown at the end. That would have been fun."

Sweeney finished his Fresno State career as the most prolific passer in NCAA history with 10,623 yards. He had 31 games of 200 yards or more passing. Jim Sweeney, Kevin's father and the head coach at Fresno State, said "Kevin has a great deal of confidence and is hard to intimidate. I'm going to have to get a taste of that game. It must have been something."

Oilers smother Browns, Kosar

HOUSTON (AP)—Mike Rozier and Alonzo Highsmith led a rugged ground game with touchdown runs, and the Houston defense contained Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar, leading the Oilers to a 24-17 victory Monday night.

The victory ended five years of winless frustration for the Oilers, who snapped a seven-game losing streak against the Browns and won their 15th home game in their last 16 non-strike contests. It left the Oilers with a 6-3 record, a game behind Cincinnati in the AFC Central. The Browns fell to third in the division with a 6-4 record. Houston quarterback Warren Moon, who had lost to the Browns seven times, hit Ernest Givins with an eight-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter, extending the Oilers' lead to 21-3.

But the Browns fought back with a 20-yard double reverse by Reggie Langhorne for a touchdown and a four-yard touchdown pass from Kosar to tight end Ozzie Newsome with 7:26 left in the game. The reception was the 600th of Newsome's NFL career. The Oilers struck quickly in the third quarter after Johnny Meads blocked a punt by Cleveland's Max Runager at the Browns' 30. On the third play, Moon scrambled out of the pocket and hit Givins in the end zone with just 1:54 gone in the second half. Givins started on the left side and zig-zagged his way to the end zone to make the diving touchdown catch in front of Browns safety Felix Wright.

Houston scored again later in the period on a three-yard run by Rozier before Langhorne scored. Rozier keyed the ground game with 76 yards on 23 carries. Two plays before Langhorne's run Houston's Doug Smith received an illegal use of hands penalty that erased an interception by cornerback Patrick Allen. After Cleveland drew within 17, Moon completed a 42-yard pass on third down to Leonard Harris, who caught the ball between defenders Mark Harper and Brian Washington and was tackled at the Browns' 35. That set up Tony Zendejas' 42-yard field goal with 1:44 left.

Highsmith's first touchdown of the season, on a one-yard run in the second quarter, gave the Oilers a 7-0 lead after a defense dominated first half. Moon hit passes of 22 yards to Givins and 24 yards to Drew Hill and then the Oilers ran six straight times with Highsmith scoring on the first rush.
