Shultz urges next president to work with Soviet Union

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Tuesday urged the next U.S. president to be realistic and deal with the Soviet Union when it is in America's self-interest.

"We shouldn't be afraid to do it," he said in an election day speech to young political leaders from around the world.

He praised the reform efforts of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and said that, if Gorbachev succeeds, "the Soviet Union will be a very different place."

But later, opening an exhibit of a Soviet photographer, Sergey Petrov, who is barred from leaving his country, Shultz criticized emigration restrictions.

"We will continue to press hard for Sergey's release as long as he is held against his will," Shultz said.

Petrov was denied a visa on the grounds he worked in a physics laboratory years ago.

The photographer and his mother also were refused permission to attend the exhibition of his work at the State Department.

"At least I feel when my works get out part of me gets out too," Petrov said in a letter to a friend that Shultz quoted.

In his foreign policy speech, Shultz said Gorbachev and his supporters "deserve credit for recognizing the problems and trying to solve them."

As a result, he said, "the environment for democratic values, peace and freedom is probably healthier than it has been for some time."

Within the Reagan administration, Shultz has played a leading role in promoting arms-control agreements with Moscow and seeking other ways to reduce tensions.

His speech, which had the earmarks of a valedictory, was aimed at presidential candidates Michael Dukakis and George Bush as well as foreign leaders.

Shultz said everyone should recognize the dangers of ballistic missiles and chemical weapons proliferation.

"When we see an opportunity for problem-solving, when there is an opportunity to do something that they (the Soviets) want to do and that we think it is in our interest, in the interest of friends around the world, we shouldn't be afraid to do it. In other words, engage," Shultz said.

He said whether Bush or Dukakis won, the United States should be vigilant in dealing with the Soviet Union.

"We're going to be realistic but, at the same time, pragmatic," Shultz said.

On a related subject, Shultz said he was confident the Soviets would complete their withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan despite an announcement last week that the pullout had been suspended.

The Soviets last spring committed themselves to remove by Feb. 15 the last of the more than 100,000 troops they have had in that country.

Meanwhile, the leader of the resistance alliance met with State Department officials. Burhanuddin Rabbani appealed for U.S. aid for Afghan troops and to rehabilitate the war-torn country.

Study: Security loose in State Department

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department has not reinvestigated four-fifths of its employees with top-secret clearances who have been on the job more than five years, according to a study by the General Accounting Office.

The study found that some of the employees who were not subject to the required re-examinations were found to have committed serious security violations and crimes.

"As the espionage cases of the past few years have clearly demonstrated, U.S. government employees with security clearances and access to classified information are prime targets for recruitment by foreign intelligence operatives," Rep. Jack Brooks, a Beaumont Democrat who requested the study by Congress' investigative arm, said.

"This underscores the importance of conducting periodic security background reinvestigations," said Brooks, chairman of the Government Operations Committee.

The study found 6,739 of the State Department's 8,929 employees in sensitive positions for more than five years have not been reinvestigated. Of these, 3,908 had not been reinvestigated in more than 10 years, and dozens had not been reinvestigated in 25 years or more.

The State Department disputed the GAO's findings, with spokesman Rudi Boone saying Tuesday: "We don't believe those figures are correct."

Boone said more than half of the approximately 9,000 employees in question had been reinvestigated over the past five years, with priority given to scrutinizing employees who have access to classified information.

"We do admit there is a backlog over the last four years we have placed emphasis on reducing the backlog, another department official.

Boone said the department expects to complete 2,000 reinvestigations this year and that its percentage of investigations matches or exceeds other federal agencies.

The GAO, in reviewing State Department files, found several employees had not undergone routine reinvestigations were subsequently determined security risks.

Among them was an economic officer who violated the department non-fraternization policy by engaging in affairs with women from Eastern European countries. The employee left classified materials unattended in 1979, after he should have been reinvestigated. He was arrested in 1986 by Drug Enforcement Administration agents and sentenced in federal court for attempting to manufacture LSD, the study said.

Another employee also violated non-fraternization policy in 1985, but he should have been reinvestigated, having an affair with an East German woman who subsequently gave birth to his son. After the birth, the GAO said, East German intelligence officials attempted to recruit him.

In a third case, while assigned to U.S. embassy in Moscow, the KGB learned an officer was a homosexual and, threatening disclosure, recruited him. Two years later, in 1983, he should have been reinvestigated but was not.

Ruling party promises fair returns in Mexico

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The governing Institutional Revolutionary Party has promised to launch a new era by respecting the vote in Nuevo Leon state municipal elections Wednesday, but opposition parties charge fraud already is in the works.

"We expect major fraud in (the town of) Garza Garcia," Daniel de la Garza, spokesman for the conservative National Action Party, or PAN, the state's leading opposition party said.

The PRI, as the party is known by its Spanish initials, will be trying to hold on to 51 mayoralties at stake in this northern border state of nearly 4 million people. Voters will also be going to the polls in the southeastern state of Tabasco, population 1.4 million, where a governorship and 17 mayoralties are being contested.

Mexico's President-elect Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who has called himself Nuevo Leon's "favorite son," has pledged to modernize the political system by, among other things, forcing his party to respect clear opposition victories.

State and national PRI leaders have said Nuevo Leon will be the showcase for Salinas' political modernization plan.

"Political modernization is going to start here," Hernando Castillo, state PRI president, said in a recent interview.

If that occurs here on Wednesday it would mark a significant change of course for the party that has ruled Mexican politics for nearly 60 years.

The tradition of fraud is so imbedded that citizens often say they need only know the name of the PRI candidate to know who the next government leader will be.

"We would like to think the modernization will start here," de la Garza said. "But what we've seen so far indicates that won't be the case."

He cited as an example the fact that the PRI-controlled electoral commissions have failed to certify the names of dozens of PAN poll watchers whose job it is to verify that the elections are fair.

"It's nothing new to say that Nuevo Leon has been considered the place where Salinas' plans for political renovation could be put in practice," Carlos Ortiz Gil, a former university professor and columnist for the daily Monterrey newspaper El Norte, wrote this week.

In Nuevo Leon, the PRI for the first time is facing major opposition from the right, the left and from dissidents within its own party.

In Tabasco, which is holding the first gubernatorial election since the July 6 federal elections, only the FDN is running an opposition candidate for the governorship.

Ambassador, Yale president dies at 69

LONDON (AP) — King Brewster Jr., a former U.S. ambassador to Britain and president of Yale University, died Tuesday at age 69 at the U.S. Embassy said.

Brewster, who became master of Oxford University's University College in 1986, died of a brain hemorrhage at an Oxford hospital, according to Yale spokesman Walter Littell in New Haven, Conn.

Brewster was president of Yale from 1963 to 1977. Former President Jimmy Carter appointed him ambassador to Britain, where he served from 1978 to 1981.

In 1985, the fellows of University College, the oldest of the 20 colleges that make up Oxford, elected Brewster to the prestigious postmaster, the second American to be named to the post. The first was A.L. Goshart, master from 1951-63.

Born in Longmeadow, Mass., June 17, 1919, Brewster graduated from Yale in 1941 and received a degree from Harvard University in 1948. He was a professor of law at Harvard from 1950-1960 and Yale provost from 1961 until he was named the school's president.
