Legislators plan to pursue merging of UT, Pan Am

EDINBURG (AP) — Two state legislators announced plans to pursue a shift of Pan American University — the state's southernmost four-year institution — into the University of Texas System.

State Reps. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, and Alex Moreno, D-Edinburg, said a bill they pre-filed Monday to effect the change is not specific about how the merger should take place.

Moreno said Pan American, whose main campus is located in his hometown, would emerge as a full partner in the UT System. The bill is a basic bill and does not resolve all of the issues that are still to be decided in the merger talks.

The Legislature last year ordered the Austin-based UT System and the College Station-based Texas A&M University System to look at shortcomings in higher education in South Texas and offer ways to improve academic opportunities.

Since then, regents of Pan American and UT have agreed to discuss cooperative programs and possible merger.

UT Chancellor Hans Mark said, "It is our best judgment that for the good of the UT System and for the good of Pan American University this merger should go on."

Mark was on the Pan American campus Monday to speak to the Faculty Senate and address some of their concerns in the event of a merger, including tenure and admissions policies.

He said UT stands to gain from South Texas' rapidly growing population and its economic potential from the growing "maquiladora" program of industrialization on the Mexican side of the border.

"We're going into this with a very clear view of self interest, and I hope we can persuade you that it's in your interest to do the same," Mark said to the faculty group.

Pan American stands to gain new academic programs through UT, he said.

Robert Shepard, a Pan American regent and member of the board's merger committee, said he had not seen the bill. Although he said, "We're definitely moving in that direction, and I hope we can come to an agreement."

Moreno and Hinojosa said they pre-filed the bill Monday to give it a head start in the Legislative session beginning Jan. 10. They said the bill in its present form would allow Pan American University at Brownsville to continue as an institution within the UT System.

Indian dance group to perform in MSC

Cultural performances presented at Texas A&M this semester have featured art, music and dance from all over the world. MSC OPAS and the International Development Forum add yet another performance to the list as they present the Cellicion Dance Group from Zuni, New Mexico on Thursday.

The shows will be at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. in 201 MSC. Tickets for the show are $2.

The group is well known for its portrayal of American Indian native dances. Originating in Zuni, New Mexico, near the Arizona state line, the group has won several awards for their authentic performances of such dances as "The White Buffalo Dance" and "The Hopi-Navajo Dance" and also for the flute solos and Indian sign language they incorporate into their shows. The group has participated in parades, powwows and other events to promote American Indian culture.

Panelists to discuss drug problem

A panel discussion on drug decriminalization will highlight a day-long seminar on "Drugs: A Modern Dilemma" Wednesday. "Tune In, Turn On, Find Out" will be held in Rudder Forum at 8 p.m.

Panelists will be Professor Ethan Nadelmann from Princeton University, Richard Cowan of the Drug Policy Foundation, Beverly Watts Davis of the Texans' War on Drugs and Sue Rusche of the National Drug Information Center. Dr. John Talmadge of Sandstone Psychiatry will moderate.

Four other lectures will be presented:

• At 11 a.m., Dennis Reardon of the Texas A&M Center for Drug Prevention and Education will present "Drugs 101" in the MSC Flag Room. He will present "Drugs 102" in the same room at 1 p.m.

• Sheryl Baylor, Federal Drug Administration officer, will speak about "Accutane: Drug Approval and Testing" at 1 p.m. in 502 Rudder.

• John McDernott, U.S. Customs Department public relations officer, will speak about "Fighting Drugs on the Border" at 3 p.m. in 502 Rudder.
