Cisneros calls for aid increase at local level

CHICAGO (AP) — Increasing medical needs of an older and more ethnic national population can't be met by the federal government, so states, cities and businesses will have to do more, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros said Monday.
"If human problems are going to be addressed, they are going to be addressed at the local level," Cisneros told delegates to the 99th annual meeting of the Association of American Medical Colleges, where he was invited to present ideas on health care from a mayoral perspective.
Cisneros said that as the baby boom generation grows older, by the year 2000, more health care will be needed by a larger number of people who cannot afford it.
Already, he added, cost-containment measures imposed on doctors and hospitals are depriving people of care they need.
"We are seeing a trend toward discharging patients from the hospital quicker and sicker," he said, adding that in-home care often is not covered by insurance plans.

Cisneros, a Democrat, is finishing his fourth two-year term as mayor. He is not running for re-election, but said he plans to write and broadcast daily radio programs in Spanish and English.
Cisneros also told the meeting of the Washington-based association, which includes medical school and hospital officials, that minority groups are growing in size rapidly, causing "sweeping" changes in many states.
He said a Rand Corp. study shows that California, the most populous state with 27 million people, will be 48 percent Hispanic, black or Asian by the year 2000.
John Sherman, executive vice president of the association, said he agrees with Cisneros that society is facing great changes, and said the medical profession will try to meet changing needs, but can't do it alone.

City prepares arsenal to fight future disasters

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — An arsenal to fight potential chemical disasters is slowly being built in this coastal city where officials say preparations previously were inadequate for an important petrochemical center.

In midsummer, the department's Hazardous Material response unit—known as HazMat—had only three disposable suits and a hodge-podge of homemade tools to work with.
W.C. Jones, an assistant fire chief, said at the time that the city's best defense was Mother Nature.
"The wind blows out of the southeast about 90 percent of the time, and that would take the chemical out over the water of the ship channel, away from people," Jones said in July in this city, where some area homes back up to refinery fences.
But, Assistant Fire Chief J.R. Guzman, said a chemical disaster arsenal is slowly being built.

The HazMat unit now boasts 12 dozen disposable suits and two completely encapsulated models, which were donated by Southwestern Refining. Valero Refining has also promised to contribute some gear.
Guzman and Jones said they need at least six encapsulated suits to work effectively, but the new equipment has eased tensions among fire department personnel.

"I feel a lot more comfortable now than I did a year ago," Guzman said.

Restaurant gives meals to homeless

DALLAS (AP) — A typical dinner menu at the Downtown Dallas Family Shelter consists of chicken-fried steak, mashed potatoes, canned corn and sheet cake.

On Sunday, the fare was more upscale: lima bean and black-eyed pea soup; green salad with basil-vinaigrette dressing; pecan- and bran-crusted boneless chicken halves; potato pancakes and praline-chocolate bread pudding.

The gourmet fare was prepared by the staff of Actuelle, a five-star restaurant in Oak Lawn.

Victor Giellisse and Clive O'Donoghue, co-owners of Actuelle, had decided to celebrate the restaurant's second anniversary by preparing 100 first-rate meals, which would cost about $45 each at Actuelle.

"We wanted to mark our anniversary in a way that really hits home," the Dutch-born Giellisse said. "It's really scary to think this is happening so close to home. We were there at the shelter last week, and it gives you goose bumps to see the kids, the babies."

The food was prepared by six members of Actuelle's kitchen staff and served by three of its waiters, all of whom came in on their day off.
