Airline moves to increase price of discount fares

NEW YORK (AP) — At least one major U.S. airline decided Wednesday to follow in part Continental Airlines' move to boost most discount fares used by the majority of vacation travelers.

Several other large carriers considered whether to boost discount fares, too.

Competitors of Continental, a subsidiary of Texas Air Corp., were expected to follow suit eventually.

"I would be surprised if they didn't," said Helene Becker, an airline analyst at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

Spokesmen for United Airlines and Delta Air Lines said that the carriers were studying Continental's move and considering whether to follow it.

Northwest Airlines partially followed the action, changing around 30,000 MaxSaver fares between different cities, said Northwest spokesman Red Tyler in Eagan, Minn. The Continental changes, he said, involve more than 100,000 such fares.

"We continue to review the others," Tyler said. "There is still indecision in the industry."

Houston-based Continental notified travel agents on Tuesday night and Wednesday that it would re-vamp its MaxSaver program to base fares on the length of a flight.

Competition on individual routes, not mileage, had determined the fares in the past.

Under the new formula, scheduled to take effect Nov. 23, MaxSaver fares for longer flights generally would be raised while those for shorter hauls would mostly be reduced.

The changes appear to have the effect of raising roughly two-thirds of Continental's MaxSaver fares and cutting the remaining third or so. They follow by a few days plans initiated by Continental and matched by other major airlines to drop another category of discount air fares — the "junk fares" available four to seven days before a flight that are used mainly by business travelers.

Like Continental's, most of Northwest's fare changes were increases, Tyler said.

Northwest so far has only matched Continental in the market where the two airlines compete directly, he said; in other markets, Northwest will wait to see whether the other carriers follow Continental's lead.

The hikes in both advance-purchase MaxSaver and last-minute junk fares reflect the recent trend toward higher air fares propelled by increasing passenger traffic.

"Consumers definitely are paying higher prices," said Andrew Geller, an airline analyst at Prudential National Bank in Philadelphia.

Airline fares are up an average 1 percent from the same point in 1987, he noted.

Bush's team quiet regarding Sununu

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of George Bush's transition team closed ranks publicly on Wednesday, refusing to talk about the reported selection of Washington outsider John Sununu as White House chief of staff. Bush asked aides to sign a pledge designed to prevent leaks and conflicts of interest.

As the capital buzzed about the choice of Sununu, the feisty, conservative governor of New Hampshire, Bush spent the day in separate meetings with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov. Bush will meet with Thatcher again over breakfast Thursday.

The vice president was mum about filling the chief of staff's job, saying "no final decisions" had been made.

Sources close to Bush said, however, he would name Sununu to the post. Next to the president, the chief of staff is the most powerful person in the White House with influence over access to the Oval Office, the agenda, scheduling and other matters.

The other contender for the job was Craig Fuller, who has been Bush's vice presidential chief of staff for four years.

Sununu, who returned to New Hampshire after a Monday night meeting with Bush, said, "We've had discussions . . . about that job (chief of staff) in particular."

At a news conference in Concord, Sununu said, "A request isn't a formal request until the tall thin guy (Bush) sings. And the tall thin guy hasn't sung publicly, and therefore I'm not going to comment on this in any way at all."

"Until the vice president decides yes or no — and he certainly could decide no in the interim — I don't think it's appropriate for me to comment."

In Washington, Fuller said at a news conference he did not know if Bush had made a decision.

Fuller said he raised the question with Bush in a morning meeting. "His comment was, 'Just let them know that when I'm ready to make an announcement, they'll hear from me on this.'"

Standing at a podium with transition co-director Robert Teeter, Fuller said, "There's no one standing here who's opposed to John Sununu having a major role in this administration."

Denying reports that he had tried to block Sununu's appointment, Fuller said, "I have in no way been opposed to John Sununu for the chief of staff job or any other position in this administration."

Meanwhile, all of the staff and volunteers involved in Bush's takeover of power were asked to sign a "standards of conduct" document that applies both during the transition and a Bush presidency.

At the top of the list was a no-leak promise that read: "I will hold in confidence any non-public information provided to me in the course of my duties with the transition and ensure that such information is used exclusively for purposes of the transition."

The document also says aides cannot use information for private gain, and disqualifies them from any matter which may involve financial conflict of interest, real or apparent.

Lawyer: North trying to 'scuttle' his charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former presidential aide Oliver L. North is seeking to scuttle the criminal charges against him by trying to disclose national secrets irrelevant to his defense, Iran-Contra prosecutors charged Wednesday.

Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh sought a court order barring North from revealing any government secrets in his defense of charges he conspired to illegally divert U.S.-Iran arms-sale proceeds to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Walsh contended in court papers that the former presidential aide had flouted court orders "by not presenting a good-faith listing of the classified documents that he reasonably deems necessary to defend against the indictment."

Walsh charged that North's "grossly overblown" list of secret government documents he wants to use as trial exhibits includes items that "are simple efforts at graymail and have no conceivable bearing on the charges in the indictment."

North's list of 40,000 pages of top-secret documents "demonstrates once again his expectation that intransigence will encumber the processes of law, threaten some of our nation's most valuable secrets and provoke a dismissal of the case," Walsh said.

The prosecution asked U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell to invoke a provision of the Classified Information Procedures Act (CIPA) barring North from disclosing any classified government information.

"North arrogantly disregarded the court's repeated orders defining his obligations under CIPA," Walsh said.

"Given North's persistent efforts on all fronts to delay the trial of this case and his repeated flouting of CIPA and the court's orders, fairness and respect for the court's procedures require an order exercising the court's preclusion powers."

North's attorneys customarily do not comment on the case.

Reporter's calls were not returned.
