Planned prison cause for party in Tyler County

WOODVILLE (AP) — With a high school band playing and an Air Force jet flyover piercing the still of the East Texas autumn, Tyler County officials broke ground Monday for a new Texas prison to be named after House Speaker Gib Lewis.

The new Lewis Unit will house 1,000 inmates and serve as a pre-release center for inmates nearing the end of their sentences. It is the last of 10 new facilities being built to ease continuous crowding problems at Texas prisons.

"It is kind of an honor," Lewis said of the prison to carry his name. "I don't want to be a permanent resident but I do look forward to visiting time after time again."

Similar units, known as re-integration centers, also being built at Snyder, Marlin and Dayton, are part of a $275 million prison expansion program that includes two maximum security prisons and four units to be operated by a private corrections company.

Woodville, a community of about 2,800 some 100 miles northeast of Houston, donated a 360-acre site for the prison just northeast of town. The city also passed a $2 million bond issue that will provide the unit with water, sewer and gas lines.

The ceremonies were held on a balcony of the Tyler County Courthouse in downtown Woodville, where police blocked off traffic so several people could watch from the courthouse grounds and from sidewalks across the street.

The prison will provide 265 full-time jobs in an area that has unemployment of 10.4 percent, and $500,000 monthly payroll will be the largest in the county, Mayor Tom Knapp said.

"You can see the importance of this to a community of this size," he said.

Robert Mann, a member of the Texas Board of Corrections, called it a great accomplishment and a great economic asset.

Lewis said the crowding problem in Texas prisons likely would require even more money for more prisons.

"But we hope very few," he said. "This takes a giant step."

"For Woodville, Texas, our day of thanksgiving is today," Knapp said. "It will change our community forever. Many of our young people not have to leave to find good employment."

Prison Director James Luman said corrections officials felt the community really wanted a prison.

"TDC intends and will be a good neighbor," he said.

"The prison system has come a long way to the point where it is a professional business," Lewis said. "It is a safe environment."

The two maximum-security prisons, each housing more than 2,000 inmates, are being built at Amarillo and Gatesville. Ground also has been broken for the privately operated facilities.

Construction of the Lewis Unit northeast of Woodville, is expected to be complete by next November, December.

Hispanic vote shift toward GOP slows

AUSTIN (AP) — Newly released poll results indicate that the shift of Texas Hispanic voters toward GOP presidential candidates has slowed, and there is unity in their opposition to the push to designate English as the official language.

The Election Day survey of 2,654 voters in Texas also found women making up the majority of Mexican-American voters in the state, said the San Antonio-based Southwest Voter Research Institute.

In Texas, the Nov. 8 poll found eight of 10 Hispanic voters supporting Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis over Republican George Bush.

This halted a drift of Hispanics toward GOP presidential candidates, said Robert Brischetto, institute executive director.

"This realignment that seems to be taking place among the white voters in Texas in presidential elections ... is not occurring among Hispanic voters," he said.

Andrew Hernandez, institute president, said the poll indicates that Hispanic voters in the state aren't tied to a single political philosophy but shift from one issue to the next.

"This Hispanic vote is not a monolithic liberal or conservative vote," Hernandez said. "It's conservative in some areas and progressive in other areas."

For example, while the poll showed support for a national health insurance program, an issue advocated by Dukakis, it also found 64 percent favoring the death penalty for murderers, something Dukakis opposed.

"There's been much discussion about whether or not Hispanics are going to be voting less Democratic and more Republican," Hernandez said. "There was some evidence to indicate that was the case going into 1980 and 1984. More and more Hispanics were voting Republican at the national level."
