Subpoena of Reagan stirs debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former White House aide Oliver North's attempt to have President Reagan and President-elect Bush testify at his Iran-Contra trial has rekindled a debate, almost as old as the nation itself, over "executive privilege."

Can a president, or a former one, be forced to testify in a legal case? Courts have provided scant guidance, but constitutional experts said Tuesday that North's legal effort may succeed.

No sitting president ever has testified in court in a criminal trial, but several have provided testimony or what might be considered the equivalent.

The personal stakes are high for North. He is charged with theft, conspiracy to defraud the government and several other felonies in the case involving the support of Nicaraguan rebels with money from the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran.

Besides Reagan and Bush, subpoenas also have been issued for Secretary of State George P. Shultz and four other State Department officials, a department spokesman said Tuesday.

The man who first tried to force a president to testify was Aaron Burr, a former vice president who stood trial in 1807 on charges of treason. Burr sought to force Thomas Jefferson, the president under whom he had served, to testify at the trial. Jefferson resisted. But Chief Justice John Marshall, presiding over the trial, ruled against Jefferson. The president eventually avoided having to appear by releasing some information Burr had sought.

The closest the Supreme Court has come to ruling on the issue presented by North's subpoena came in the Watergate tapes decision of 1974, in a case called Nixon vs. U.S.

The court then ruled, 8-0, that President Richard M. Nixon had to comply with a special prosecutor's subpoena seeking the surrender of White House tape recordings.

"The general assertion of privilege must yield to the demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial," the high court ruled 15 years ago.

Jerome Barron, a law professor at George Washington University, said on Tuesday that the 1974 decision is a strong precedent for North.

"Whether Mr. Reagan or Mr. Bush can be subpoenaed was resolved in Nixon vs. U.S., and the answer is yes," Barron said.

"If the evidence (sought by North) is material, I think Reagan and Bush can be required to appear," Barron said.

Oil import restrictions ruled out by Reagan

LOS ANGELES (AP) - President Reagan said Tuesday he has decided against any oil import fee or other action to curb oil imports but conceded that "the free world will become increasingly dependent on oil supplies from potentially insecure sources."

The president said he acted on the recommendation of Commerce Secretary C. William Verity who reported that import restrictions would not be cost effective and, in the long run, would impair rather than enhance national security.

Verity's report was the outcome of an investigation requested in December 1987 by the National Energy Security Committee, the president said.

He said Verity concluded that there has been a substantial improvement in U.S. energy security since the last similar investigation in 1979.

In a message to Congress that accompanied his statement, the president urged lawmakers to deregulate natural gas prices, permit expanded oil exploration in Alaska and the outer Continental Shelf and liberalize the depletion allowance for oil and gas producers.

Reagan said that declining domestic oil production, rising oil imports and growing free world dependence on potentially insecure sources of supply raise a number of concerns, including vulnerability to a major supply disruption.

"The investigation found that the maintenance of U.S. access to sufficient supplies of petroleum is essential to our economic security, foreign policy flexibility and defense preparedness," he said. "Given these factors, the secretary of commerce found that petroleum imports threaten to impair the national security."

He said that, in deciding not to recommend any import restrictions, Verity took into account the administration's program to improve energy security.

In particular, Reagan cited decontrol of oil prices and elimination of allocation controls as actions his administration has taken to strengthen the domestic oil industry.

Soviets deny finding more Armenian quake survivors

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency Tass on Tuesday denied reports in the Western news media that 17 more survivors were found in a ruined bakeshop more than three weeks after the Dec. 7 earthquake in Armenia.

French and British broadcast reports said the survivors existed on grain and melted snow until they were discovered in the wrecked city of Spitak in northwestern Armenia.

But Tass quoted Norik Muradyan, chief of rescue operations in Spitak, as saying Tuesday in a telephone interview, "The last living person was removed by rescuers from the ruins of buildings and structures in Spitak 10 days ago."

"The Western press reports that supposedly 17 living people were found in Spitak on the 24th day after the natural disaster have no foundation."

The agency said 28 additional bodies were pulled from the rubble since Thursday, bringing the total of recovered bodies to 24,888.

Europe 1 radio in Paris on Monday quoted a nurse for Doctors of the World, a French humanitarian group, as saying the 17 survivors were found in a bread factory near Spitak on Wednesday. It said the nurse, speaking on condition of anonymity, reported they survived by eating grain and drinking melted snow.

The London commercial radio station LBC reported that French medics said the 17 were found Saturday.

The quake leveled Spitak, where 25,000 people had lived.
