SCS provides academic counseling

By Sherri Roberts

STAFF WRITER

Development of the "other education," that of social and extracurricular involvement, may come easy for most students, but the road to academic success usually is not so smooth.

Through various academic and career programs, the Student Counseling Services offers students the opportunity to sharpen study skills and explore career interests.

Workshops offered throughout the semester include topics on test anxiety, conquering finals, power learning techniques, and a career interest clinic.

"Our goal is to help students succeed," Mary Olona, SCS counseling psychologist, said.

Olona said failing to meet academic performance expectations can damage the self esteem of many students.

"A lot of students think they are what they get, but that's not true," she said. "A grade of 'C' does not mean you're an average person, or an 'F' that you've failed life."

One of the SCS's most popular workshops, she said, is the test-anxiety workshop.

Offered twice a semester, the three-week workshop gives test taking strategies and relaxation techniques to help students manage their anxiety before, during, and after tests.

Although too much stress often causes one to freeze up, a certain amount helps one to perform, she said.

Workshops try to help students develop the stress level needed to achieve optimum performance.

Other workshops offered include a "Conquering Finals" workshop,

Program helps students dealing with break-ups

By Andrea Warrenburg

REPORTER

The Student Counseling Service is putting together a program to help students deal with the pain and rejection caused by broken relationships.

The title of the program is "Relationship Issues," but the primary focus will be on overcoming rejection in romantic relationships.

"Rejection is an inevitable part of life, especially for students who in college are experiencing their first powerful relationship," said Dr. Ted Stachowiak, a counseling psychologist at SCS. "They are exploring relationships for the first time and breaking up can cause an intense sense of loss."

Stachowiak and Bea Garrett, a doctoral psychology intern at the counseling service, will be leading the small support group.

"The actual rejection experience may cause people to feel like a failure or unlovable and may begin to affect all parts of their lives," Stachowiak said. "We will help them through a five-stage recovery process that involves members so they can get in touch with their emotions and gain support from others."

The five stages most people go through while recovering from a breakup include:

- Maneuvering — trying to figure out how to handle it by blaming others.
- Concluding — forming beliefs about the situation, for example, the opposite sex isn't trustworthy.
- Letting go — taking a close look at how they're clinging and finally letting go.
- Objectifying — looking at the relationship objectively and trying to understand how and why it happened.
- Re-emergence — getting on with their lives and trying new relationships.

"We want them to recognize what stage they're in so they can gain hope from knowing there is an end to the pain," Stachowiak said.

The support group will be no larger than 10 members, but if interest increases more groups may be set up.

"Individuals who have never had group counseling may be hesitant," Stachowiak said. "But if they can tolerate the initial anxiety they will realize how supportive and caring others can be."

Interested individuals can call the counseling service for more information at 845-4427.

Abstinence education bill draws support

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill that would require school districts that teach sex education to include information on abstinence as the only 100 percent effective method of preventing sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted pregnancies drew support from several groups Monday.

Sen. Kenneth Armbrister, the father of two teen-agers, said studies indicate sex education courses that teach various forms of birth control — but do not make abstinence the goal — "may actually be a factor in increasing sexual activity of teen-agers."

Armbrister, D-Victoria, said current sex education courses reflect the attitude of "Well, you know how it was when you were that age," or "Kids are going to do it anyway."

"We're here to tell you that Texas youngsters don't always feel that that's true, that not all kids are engaged in premarital sex, not all youngsters think that it's the right thing to do to be engaged in that — that it's not a shield that they can hang up as an award," Armbrister told a news conference. "It should be the other way."

He said he had been asked if the bill was an attempt to impose morals on young people, and he said his answer was, "Probably absolutely, yeah, we are. We think it's important that this be taught."

Armbrister said sex education courses including abstinence already are in place in seven school districts.

tionally and nationally.

Though these services are available to all individuals who have paid their student services fee, many do not take advantage of them, Olona said.

"Many students are afraid they'll lose their social life, but that's not true," she said. "We try to teach them ways to study effectively and efficiently so they can have a social life."

To receive more information about SCS services or to sign up for a workshop, call 845-1651.

Appearing in support of the Armbrister bill were representatives of Project Sex Respect; Texans for Better Health; Concerned Women of America; Citizens for Excellence in Education in San Antonio; and State Board of Education member John Shields, also of San Antonio.

"Kids need to know the truth, and that truth includes that saving sex for marriage is the healthiest choice they can make," Ann Newman of the San Antonio organization, said.
