Stulce

self. If you've done the work you feel a lot better than if you've just goofed around."

Stulce isn't very big on goofing around. He moved off campus because he felt he could concentrate on his studies better. A sophomore general studies major, he takes school-work seriously.

But he can also understand Barnes' decision to quit school for a while and go into full-time competition.

"A lot of people say Randy should have finished up. But, for him, I think it was the best thing to do," Stulce said. "You're only young once and you try to make that last as long as you can."

"Being in college, you can't really master both (shotputting and studies), I think, and keep your sanity. Training with him and getting his opinion on it, you can kind of understand. He's never young twice."

Somehow, Stulce is going to try and get the most of both academics and shotputting at A&M. But, if things go as planned, he will continue throwing the shot after he graduates.

"After the degree, I'll try to go as long as possible — until it seems like it's going to play out," he said.

He also plans to put forth an effort to make the next Olympic team, but you never know what will happen in four years, he said.

Stulce relishes his relationship with A&M's other thrower, Patrik Hennings of Sweden.

He said they are always competitive with one another and try to push each other as much as possible.

There is also a soft spot in his heart for Johan Svensson, a former A&M shotputter.

"If there's anyone I want to see do good, it's them — being together so much and going through so much sweat and tears," he said.

Stulce is hopeful this season will be a great one. He hopes to throw over 70 feet, which would go far beyond his previous best of 63-9½ at last year's SWC Championships — the best throw in the SWC last spring.

Looking ahead for Stulce, very little seems out of reach.

There will be plenty of sweat, but most of the tears should be of joy.

Jordan remains focused despite hitting milestone

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan is proud of his 10,000 career points, but he said Thursday he has no intention of getting bogged down in the numbers game.

"It means an awful lot to me," Jordan said as he prepared for practice with the Chicago Bulls. "It's something I will always be able to look back on."

"But, realistically, I'm not going to put myself in a position where I'm thinking of 20,000 or 30,000 points. I have a goal and that's to help the Bulls get an NBA championship."

Jordan scored his 10,000th point with his 33rd and final point Wednesday night in the Bulls' 120-108 loss to the 76ers in Philadelphia. It came in his fifth year and his 303rd game.

Only Wilt Chamberlain accomplished the feat quicker. Chamberlain did it in four years and in 236 games.

Jordan might have done it in four years had he not missed 64 games in his second season with a foot injury.

He might not have done it Wednesday night had he not insisted on playing despite a knee injury suffered at home Tuesday night against Dallas. He had the knee iced for 10 hours and his condition was touch-and-go until gametime.

"He could legitimately not have played because of that knee," said Bulls coach Doug Collins. "But he went out there and, with five minutes to go, we still had a chance to win. It didn't work out but from night to night, Michael has shown what a great competitor he is. For me to coach him is a great honor."

"Michael is one of a special kind of athlete who doesn't come around often" said Collins. "I played with some great players with the 76ers. There was Billy Cunningham, Bobby Jones, Dr. J., and Maurice Cheeks."

49ers' Walsh quits, Seifert takes reins

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Bill Walsh went out a winner Thursday when he resigned as coach of the San Francisco 49ers and joined Vince Lombardi as the only coaches to step down after winning a Super Bowl.

Walsh also won the power struggle with owner Eddie DeBartolo Jr. as the 49ers selected defensive coordinator George Seifert as their new head coach. DeBartolo was reportedly interested in getting a well-known coach to take over, while Walsh lobbied hard for Seifert.

Walsh will stay on with the 49ers as executive vice president for football operations.

Walsh coached the 49ers to their third Super Bowl championship of the 1980s last Sunday, beating the Cincinnati Bengals 20-16.

Lombardi led Green Bay to victories in the first two Super Bowls (1967-1968) and then retired to the Packers' front office. He later returned as head coach of the Washington Redskins.

Relations between Walsh and DeBartolo have frequently been frosty. Last season, when the 49ers lost to Minnesota in the first round of the playoffs after compiling the league's best regular-season record, Walsh lost his team president title.

But DeBartolo denied that there was a serious rift between the two.

Earlier this month, he told reporters, "That's the furthest thing from the truth that I could imagine. Bill and I are friends, good friends."

Walsh, who held the 49ers' coaching position longer than anyone else and is only the team's fourth coach with a winning record, had strongly endorsed Seifert, a 49-year-old San Francisco native who has been 49ers' defensive aide since 1980 before that assisted Walsh at Stanford.

Walsh, who ended his career with an overall record of 102-63-1, including playoff games, joined the 49ers in 1979 after two years as coach at Stanford.

In his first season, the stumbling 49ers matched their 1978 record 2-14. The following year they went 6-10.

Then the fun began.

In 1981, the 49ers, with Joe Montana out of Notre Dame at quarterback, went 13-3 and defeated Cincinnati in the Super Bowl.

In strike-shortened 1982, the 49ers went 3-6. But they bounced back to 10-6 in 1983 and in 1984 went 15-1, winning their second Super Bowl with a resounding victory over the Miami Dolphins.

They went 10-6 in 1985, 10-5-1 in 1986 and 13-2 in 1987 — but saw dissent between Walsh and DeBartolo were sown when San Francisco lost first-round playoff game all three seasons.

Last season looked to be more the same, and the 49ers at one point were just 6-5, embroiled in a name quarterback controversy and all written off for the playoffs.

But Montana returned to form and sent Steve Young to the bench as the team won four of its last five games 10-6 in the regular season, the swept aside Minnesota and Chicago en route to last Sunday's dramatic last-minute victory.
