Legislative leaders
 laud regular session
 as calm, efficient

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislative leaders said Monday the current regular session is one of the calmest and most efficient they can remember, but added the possibility of a special session still exists.

"This is a relatively calm session, by far the easiest I can remember," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who has presided over the Texas Senate since 1973.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said he has never seen legislators working as hard or cooperating better.

"People are trying to get something accomplished," he said.

Both leaders spoke to newspaper executives during the 68th annual Texas Daily Newspaper Association convention.

But Hobby and Lewis said lawmakers, just past the halfway point in the current 140-day session, may need overtime to finish their business when the session ends May 29.

Lewis said overhauling the workers' compensation system may take legislators into a special session, while Hobby said restructuring the state's prison system may be the culprit.

Hobby, a Democrat, said the Legislature has come to an agreement on building additional prison beds and establishing community-based facilities to ease overcrowding at the Texas Department of Corrections.

And lawmakers have taken steps to attack the underlying causes of crime, such as poverty, lack of an education and drug and alcohol abuse prevention and child protective services, he said.

But, Hobby said, a special session may be needed to compose an appropriations bill to cover spending on the proposed criminal justice initiatives.

Lewis said "the only thing I can see on the horizon" that would cause a special session is a battle over proposed changes to the workers' comp laws.

The House has passed a bill changing the structure of benefits to workers injured on the job, restructuring the administrative agency in charge of workers' comp and lessening court involvement in resolving disputed claims.

The House bill, opposed by organized labor and attorneys who represent injured workers in court, is expected to run into stiff opposition in the Senate. Hobby said he hopes to have a Senate bill on workers' comp within the next month.

Hobby said the "litmus test" of the workers' comp bill has become trial de novo, which allows disputed claims to reach the district court level without regard to previous administrative rulings.

Judge's ruling delays release of Adams

DALLAS (AP) — A judge's last-minute intervention kept Randall Dale Adams in prison Monday as he was about to walk free after serving 12 years in prison on a controversial conviction for the killing of a police officer.

District Judge Ron Chapman reset Adams' bond at $100,000, superseding another judge's decision to release Adams simply on a promise to appear in court.

The action, which culminated an afternoon of confusion among prosecutors, judges and defense attorneys, came after the District Attorney's office filed a motion to have state District Judge Larry Barakare moved from the case.

In another late development, prosecutors said for the first time since his conviction was overturned after being questioned in the film "The Thin Blue Line" that they were prepared to retry Adams.
