Strike at Continental fails to get attendants' support

HOUSTON (AP) — A union that claims to represent 6,800 Continental Airlines flight attendants called a strike Monday against the sister carrier of strikebound Eastern Airlines, but the action drew few attendants to picket lines and had no apparent effect on operations.

A Continental spokesman said the carrier had plenty of reserve flight attendants ready to replace any striking workers, but indications Monday were that few would be needed.

As of midday Monday, only 35 attendants were participating in the walkout and would be "permanently replaced," said Lewis Jordan, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the airline. No flights had been cancelled due to labor problems, he said.

"It seems to be an illogical time for a strike," Jordan said. "We are paying our flight attendants at comparable industry rates. We just gave them more money. We just gave them better working conditions."

Carla Winkler, president of the striking Union of Flight Attendants, on Monday described the January wage increase as "moderate," but insisted Continental attendants still were making considerably less than their peers at other major airlines and were demanding measures to increase job security.

She said she had no figures available on the number of attendants honoring the strike, but that she expected the total to increase as word of the surprise action spread.

"I'm sure there may be cancellations and there may be delays," Winkler said. "If we shut down flights that will be to our advantage to resolve this... but I doubt we'll be shutting down the airline."

About 10 Continental attendants set up picket lines at the carrier's main Houston hub, and numerous others walked past their striking colleagues and pledged to continue working. Other major Continental hubs had fewer pickets, including two at Denver's Stapleton Airport.

"Our flights are running normally, which shows that our flight attendants are proud of their service and will continue to support the company's goal of providing for the customer," Continental said of the strike, which began at 9 a.m. Monday. "The union will not be successful in its attempts to disrupt the public's travel plans."

Some striking attendants said it was not the primary goal of the action to disrupt operations, but that the walkout was designed more as a publicity move.

"We don't want to hurt the airline or the traveling public," Pat Patnesky, who has worked nearly 18 years as a Continental attendant, said.

Proposed amendment specifies victims' rights

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposed state constitutional amendment guaranteeing crime victims certain rights would give them "the respect and consideration they deserve," a victims' advocate told lawmakers Monday.

"In this day and age of increasing and random violence, we've got to move beyond mere symbolism," said Anne Seymour, public affairs director for the National Victim Center in Fort Worth.

The current victims' bill of rights in Texas is in law but not in the state constitution.

Seymour told the House Criminal Jurisprudence Committee the law contains a disclaimer "which notes that if any of these crucial rights aren't observed, the victim has no recourse."

"When a rape victim is still sitting in a cold hospital corridor waiting for her exam and the alleged offer is already out on bail, symbolism is a cruel slap in the face," Seymour said.

Rep. Dan Morales, a San Antonio Democrat who heads the committee, referred the proposed constitutional amendment to a subcommittee.

The proposed amendment, which would require voter approval if passed by the Legislature, states that a crime victim has the right to: be treated with fairness and respect; protection; notification of court proceedings; be present at public court proceedings; confer with the prosecution; restitution; and information about the conviction, sentence, imprisonment and release of the accused.

The National Victim Center and other such advocacy groups want the proposed constitutional amendment to be submitted to voters this November, according to a release.

Both Eastern and Continental are owned by Houston-based Texas Air Corp.
