Religious officials protest new video by boycotting Pepsi

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Catholic Bishop Rene Gracida urged Roman Catholics in South Texas not to buy PepsiCo Inc. products after he viewed what he called a "sacrilegious" music video by pop star Madonna, who made a Pepsi commercial featuring the song "Like a Prayer."

Gracida, bishop of the Corpus Christi Diocese, said he made the decision after seeing on MTV the video for the song featured in the commercial and after reading an extensive interview with the singer in the March 19 issue of the New York Times.

"I was outraged," Gracida said. "She's using Catholic symbolism in what I consider a sacrilegious way. She, like others, is seeking to justify abandoning her former religion by attacking it and making fun of it."

"He should stop watching MTV," Liz Rosenberg, Madonna's press agent, told the Associated Press on Tuesday.

The press agent said she had heard of complaints from religious leaders in Italy, but not in the United States, until Tuesday.

Pepsi spokesman Jeff Brown said the commercial, which also features the song, was shown once on March 2 and will not be shown again. Brown said the commercial does not include the imagery that outraged Gracida.

"People are making an association between the commercial and the video, which we find very unfortunate," Brown said. "But since it is the same performer singing the same song, we understand the confusion."

In the March 24 issue of South Texas Catholic, distributed to more than 40,000 people in 17 counties, Gracida asks Catholics to "refrain from purchasing any of the following PepsiCo products during the remainder of this year of 1989: Frito-Lay products, Pepsi-Cola beverages, Slice soft drinks, Ruffles chips, Pizza Hut restaurants, Taco Bell restaurants and Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants."

Gracida, however, said it is not a boycott and that he knew of no other bishops or parishes that have stopped buying Pepsi products.

The Mississippi-based American Family Association also has criticized the video.

Gracida and the Rev. Don Wildmon, executive director of the Mississippi organization, said the fact the commercial will not be shown again does not stop their outrage.

"I think it's wrong to use Madonna in their campaign to reach young people, given her history, attitude and predilection for mocking her former religion," Gracida told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

Wildmon said his organization sent letters to "about 3,000 Christian leaders of all denominations" describing the video and urging them to boycott Pepsi products for the rest of 1989 or until the company cancels the singer's contract.

Pepsi-Cola has signed the singer — who drapes herself in crucifixes — to a $5 million contract to be a spokeswoman for the soft drink through commercials and on her upcoming "Like a Prayer" tour.

Rosenberg, a vice president with Warner Bros. Records in New York, said the company does not censor its artists.

Small airplane hits power line, kills 4 passengers

HONDO (AP) — Four people were killed early Tuesday when their small airplane struck power lines and crashed during severe weather, authorities said.

The names of the victims, three men and a woman, were withheld until relatives could be notified, Medina County Sheriff Wesley Scott said.

The single-engine Cessna crashed about 3 a.m. just off of State Highway 173, about 12 miles north of Hondo.

The plane was flying to Carrizo Springs, where the aircraft's pilot lived, said Scott.

The sheriff said the plane stopped in Castroville about 1:30 a.m. and that the pilot decided to continue the trip. But when it was near Hondo the pilot apparently decided to return to Castroville.

"They were flying low and they hit a power line and crashed a short distance from there," Scott said. "The wreckage was strewn from west to the east, so it appears they decided to turn around because of the bad weather."
