Survey: top sports colleges lack integrity

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans widely doubt the integrity of the nation's top sports colleges, believing they commonly give secret payments and inflated grades to student athletes.

A majority of respondents in a Media General-Associated Press national survey also suspected athletic booster clubs of making secret payments to players. And two-thirds said the colleges overemphasize sports and neglect academic standards for athletes.

Seventy-six percent said colleges should not be permitted to pay money to their student athletes. More than 55 percent believed schools and booster clubs commonly make payments under the table. At the same time, 83 percent favored athletic scholarships. Among blacks, for whom scholarships often provide an escape route from poverty, support reached 92 percent.

The poll, conducted by telephone among a random sample of 1,108 adults March 6-15, had a three-point margin of sampling error.

Concern was undiminished among the 54 percent of respondents who called themselves college sports fans. They agreed in solid majorities that sports are overemphasized, academics neglected and improper payments common.

More than eight in 10 favored the provisions of the NCAA's Proposition 42, which would prohibit schools from giving athletic scholarships to freshmen unable to meet the NCAA's academic requirements.

Georgetown coach John Thompson staged a two-game protest strike this winter, arguing that the rule would disproportionately disqualify black athletes. The rule does not go into effect until 1990-91 and Thompson ended his walkout after the NCAA said it would reconsider the rule.

But 81 percent of the blacks said they would favor the rule even if it could disqualify many blacks and other minority athletes from scholarships.

Respondents aged 65 and over were the least supportive of scholarships in general and the least satisfied with academic standards, while the youngest, ages 18-29, were the most supportive. Blacks, similarly, were less critical than whites of Division I programs.

For example, while 77 percent of the oldest respondents said the schools overemphasize sports, that fell to 61 percent of the youngest and 52 percent of blacks. While 39 percent of blacks said academic standards for athletes are high enough, that fell to 30 percent of the youngest group and 18 percent of the oldest.

All colleges can set their own grade requirements for student athletes, and standards vary. The NCAA has requirements for freshmen at Division I schools that call for a "C" average in a core of 11 courses and a minimum of 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or a 15 on the American College Test.

In the poll, nearly three-quarters said a "C" average should be required for a student to play sports and an additional 20 percent favored even higher grades.

But there was a significant lack of faith in the grading process itself. Half the respondents called it common practice for professors to give student athletes higher grades than they deserve so they can continue to play.

The poll was conducted by the AP and Media General Inc., a communications company based in Richmond, Va. It publishes the Richmond Times-Dispatch, the Richmond News Leader, the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune and the Winston-Salem (N.C.) Journal, and operates TV stations WFL in Tampa, WCBD in Charleston, S.C., and WJKS in Jacksonville, Fla.

— AP survey polled favored the rule, as high a level of support as among whites. Moreover, eight in 10 of the supporters — blacks and whites alike —
