Bill proposes to inform juries of parole system

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a proposal Monday that would lay the constitutional groundwork for allowing juries, in considering punishment on certain felony convictions, to be informed how the parole system operates.

Opponents argued that the proposed constitutional amendment would result in longer prison sentences, which would require more beds for a prison system that is about to burst at the seams.

The proposal by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown was sent to the House on a 26-5 vote, after two senators pleaded unsuccessfully with their colleagues to take a closer look at the measure.

If at least two-thirds of the 150-member House also approves the proposal, it would be submitted to the voters at a Nov. 7 statewide election.

The 1985 Legislature amended the Code of Criminal Procedure to allow judges to charge juries on parole law and how juries could consider it in determining sentences. That provision, however, was declared unconstitutional in 1987 by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said with passage of his proposed amendment there would not be any question that the Legislature "has the authority under our constitution" to reinstate the practice thrown out by the criminal court.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, asked Brown if he would accept an amendment "to change the name of this act to the Mandatory Prison Overcrowding Act."

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, also said that Brown's proposal would result in longer sentences, but Brown said, "Not necessarily."

Brown said some argue that the practice causes juries to increase sentences so prisoners will stay locked up for a certain period of time, but others said misinformed juries give more time than they otherwise would.

"The intent, of course, is not to increase sentences but to provide for a better informed juror," Brown said.

He added that the proposal — because so few felonies go to trial and even fewer result in convictions — would have a "minimum impact" on the state prison population.

Washington, however, called the measure "another bazooka in the prosecutor's arsenal," and Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, called the measure an "absolute mess" that is "fraught with error" and would "further confuse the jury."

"You're creating a monster" that district judges have told us they can't comply with, Glasgow said.

A bill spelling out how the law would be changed if the constitutional amendment is approved also cleared the Senate 26-5.

In other action Monday, the Senate approved and sent to the House measures that would:

- Eliminate the November deadline for issuing $200 million in Texas agricultural water conservation bonds.
- Allow Texas Department of Correction employees, under certain conditions, to carry forward accumulated leave time.
- Authorize the Texas Employment Commission to obtain criminal background information on persons applying for jobs considered "security sensitive."

Resort town lacks adequate EMT service

SURFSIDE (AP) — The thousands of visitors who pack the beach on hot summer days may think this popular resort town has everything to offer, but its two emergency medical technicians warn that ambulances are not always available.

"I guess someone is going to have to die before the problem is resolved," said Pete David, one of two emergency medical technicians in this Brazoria County community of 600 year-round residents.

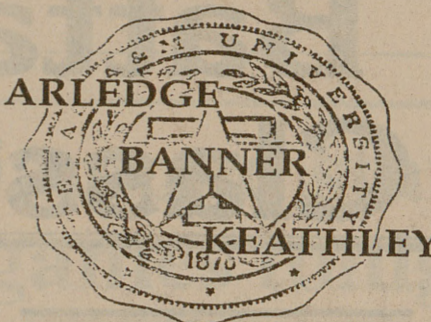

As many as 40,000 people pack a four-mile stretch of beach on weekends, a number that has been growing as the site grows in popularity.

But when Marshaline Coward cannot find a volunteer crew for one of her ambulances stationed here during summer months free of charge, the closest ambulance could be 20 minutes away.

"If someone has a heart attack, we need to get to them in less than 10 minutes to have a chance to save a person's life," Coward told the Houston Chronicle. "With traffic backed up . . . I guess they'd either suffer brain damage or die."

Coward owns Lifeline, a private ambulance service in Clute that covers several unincorporated areas. She is called first in case of a medical emergency, but if no Lifeline ambulances are available, the call is transferred to Freeport, where a volunteer crew is reluctantly dispatched.

"It's difficult for me to take the volunteers and contributed money from my own community and run an ambulance service somewhere else," Freeport Fire Chief Bob Johnson said.
