Safety ed program offers 1-hour credit in drug prevention

By Denise Thompson
STAFF WRITER

In addition to various campus programs aimed at preventing alcohol and drug abuse, the industrial vocation and technical education department offers a one-credit class for students interested in learning more.

Safety Education 489, Preventing Alcohol and Drug Abuse, is a result of a six-year program with the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse, Dr. Maurice Dennis, coordinator of the safety education program at Texas A&M said.

"We've been working with the TCADA for about six years to prevent alcohol abuse with A&M students," he said. "And this is just one more direction we've gone to try and reach that goal."

Because vast amounts of information are available on alcohol and drug abuse prevention, the safety education program decided to teach it on a more formal basis in Spring 1986.

"We were going to sororities and dorms," he said, "trying to teach them everything about the subject in a 30-minute time period. We developed the class so we'd have 15 weeks to really inform the students."

Dennis said the 400 number on the course is misleading because 489 is the number given to any class when it is formed.

"Before we can get a regular number for the class, we have to keep it at 489 until we develop the curriculum and determine whether we'll have the students necessary to fill a regular class," he said. "So the class has got a 400 number on it, but the curriculum is no more difficult than a 200-level course."

The course explores the physiological and psychological effects of alcohol and other drugs on humans, means of preventing problems, recognition of problems and sources of assistance.

The course outline is broken into 10 objectives and includes legal considerations, symptoms and coping with alcohol and drug-related situations.

Because the course is an elective, students from all majors can register for the course. However, enrollment is limited to promote student interaction, he said.

Dennis will teach the class in the fall. For more information call Dennis at 845-3019.

Killings

death, said Oran Neck, agent in charge for U.S. Customs in Brownsville.

The case is being investigated by Customs, the U.S. Attorney's Office, Mexican federal authorities and local law enforcement agencies on both sides of the border.

It is the second drug-related mass killing discovered near the border in less than two weeks.

Mexican authorities found the bodies of three women and six men March 29 on an abandoned ranch near Agua Prieta, Sonora, just across the border from Douglas, Ariz.

Five were at the bottom of a well, and four, covered with lime to decompose them, were in an earthen septic tank. All nine had been tortured, mutilated and bound, officials said.

On April 1, the bodies of three more men killed in similar fashion were fished from the well. All were believed to be Mexican nationals.

Investigators said possible motives for the Agua Prieta slayings range from revenge for lost narcotics or drug money to discouraging informants to fighting between drug smuggling factions.

At a Tucson news conference on Thursday, Pima County Sheriff Clarence Dupnik termed as "reasonable speculation" the likelihood that the Agua Prieta deaths were linked to those of five Hispanics, two from Arizona and three from Sonora, found March 27 bound and stabbed in a Tucson shed.

Law officers on both sides of the border had been stumped by the Kilroy case, with no clues despite an intensive search, the questioning of nearly 100 people and a $15,000 reward.

Kilroy's disappearance also was re-enacted for a segment on Fox Television's America's Most Wanted program.

Wine

Research revealed that certain molecules in red grape skins that are released during a processing technique affect the amount of quercetin in the wine, Leighton said.

After discovering the mutagen, Leighton said, he and other scientists decided more should be learned about it before publicizing the finding.

"It was found that it would completely block the action of a whole series of carcinogens," he said, describing the substance as having "a Jekyll and Hyde personality."

Cancer cells develop from the "initiation" phase to the "promotion" phase, in which they proliferate over time into a cancerous mass. Quercetin has been found to act on cells in the promotion stage, Leighton said.

It also has been determined that the onion family of vegetables contains high rates of quercetin, a specific discovery compared to previous general findings that lots of fruits and vegetables in the diet are linked to lower cancer rates, Leighton said.

Furthermore, recently published reports indicate that Chinese people who have eaten large amounts of onions and garlic have high levels of quercetin and low rates of stomach cancer, according to Leighton.

"We have shown that the bacteria in our gut can carry out these molecular activities," thus activating anticarcinogens, he said.

But Leighton said only if the molecules in the gut process the sugar off of the quercetin are the anticarcinogens seen.

Research indicates such reactions are occurring in humans, he added.

Leighton declined to say whether drinking large quantities of red wine would guard against cancer. "Having a large helping of onion rings might be more beneficial than drinking a lot of red wine," he said.

He did say that quercetin's power as an anticarcinogen outweighs any possible health risks of the mutagen.

David Jacobson-Kram, an associate professor of oncology at Johns Hopkins University and director of the Center of Toxicology at Microbiological Associates Inc., said Leighton's study indicates quercetin's anticarcinogenic activity apparently is unrelated to the fact that it is a mutagen.

"So what you have is this chemical is really having a dual effect," he said.

Jacobson-Kram said mutagenic ingredients have been found in a variety of alcoholic beverages. "The real issue is these things are found in very small quantities compared to ethanol," he said.

There currently is debate over whether ethanol, the substance that makes a person intoxicated from drinking alcohol, is a carcinogen, according to Jacobson-Kram.

He also said there is no indication people should drink an abundance of red wine in hopes of fighting off cancer.

Ingram said the American Cancer Society encourages moderation in alcohol consumption.

Syphilis

except for themselves," said Dr. Howard Minkoff, a physician at Brooklyn's Health Science Center.

In Dallas County, the number of syphilis cases increased 22 percent in the last three months of 1988 and nearly tripled in the first two months of 1989, said Don Hutheson, program manager of the disease-intervention staff of the county's Health Department.

"Since 1982, we had been in steady decline," Hutheson said. "Even in the first two or three quarters of 1988, it was going down. Then all of a sudden in the last quarter of 1988, we started seeing an increase in syphilis like a lot of places in the United States."

House OKs bill against taking officer's weapon

AUSTIN (AP) — Prompted in part by incidents of law enforcement officers being killed with their own guns, the Texas House tentatively approved a bill Tuesday that would make it a felony to take or attempt to take a peace officer's weapon.

Concern was expressed about police brutality during debate on the measure, but Rep. Bill Blackwood said he planned for an amendment before final House passage that would address such concerns.
